Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Monique Dionne Davis was born August 19, 1936, in Chicago, Illinois to James and Constance McKay. After graduating from Calumet High School at age sixteen, Davis attended one semester at Chicago State University, leaving to get married and move to Denver, Colorado. After having two children, Robert and Monique, Davis returned to Chicago State University and received her bachelor's degree in elementary education in 1966, and later her master's degree in guidance and supervision. Davis also went on to earn graduate hours in administration supervision and special education, as well as credits toward her doctoral degree in administration and supervision from Roosevelt University.

Davis first worked in education in the Chicago Public School system where she taught for eighteen years. She later served as an administrator for the Chicago Board of Education, and a training specialist for City Colleges of Chicago.

Davis' political career began as a volunteer to Democratic candidates Gus Savage, Monica Faith Stewart and Harold Washington. In 1987, Davis was elected to the Illinois General Assembly, where she has served since. She has served as chair of the Insurance Committee, vice chair of Financial Institutions, member of the Appropriations – General Services Committee, Appropriations – Higher Education Committee, Elementary & Secondary Education Committee, State Government Committee, The Amistad Commission, Racial Profiling Prevention and Data Oversight Board, and co-chairperson of the Commission to End Disparities Facing the African American Community.

Davis has received several awards, including Teacher of the Year from the Gresham Elementary School, Teacher Who Makes a Difference from the Center for New Schools, and Excellent Legislator from Operation PUSH and the Department of Aging.

Davis is a member of Trinity United Church of Christ, Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc., NAACP, and Operation PUSH. She is the mother of two, grandmother of four, and great-grandmother of seven.

Video Oral History Interview with The Honorable Monique Davis, Section A2000_048_001_001, TRT: 0:30:36 ?

Monique Davis describes her family. Her father, James McKay, was a scarfer at the United States Steel Mill for fifty years and her mother, Constance McKay, was a department store traffic clerk and a beautician. Davis recalls her parents as avid readers whose greatest desire was for their children's education. Davis recalls her childhood on the South Side of Chicago at 95th and Harvard as loving and nourishing. She also describes her sisters' piano recitals, playing school with a collection of moldy textbooks, pretending to fish with the neighbors in the vacant lot across the street, and her father giving the neighboring families rides to the grocery store.

Monique Davis discusses her family, childhood, and early career as a teacher. Her mother, Constance McKay, was born in Monroe, Louisiana and raised in Houston, Texas by Virginia, or "Mother V," and "Papa Dutton." Virginia's mother, Davis's great-grandmother, had been a slave. Davis' father, James McKay, was born in Savannah, Georgia and was raised in Macon, Georgia by "Grandma Van" and "Papa." Papa originally had an African name, but took his wife's Irish name when they married. Davis recalls her close-knit community, her parents' emphases on education and church, her competitive siblings, and the racism she faced in school. Davis married Robert Davis in 1956 and had two children before returning to Chicago State University at the age of twenty-seven to finish her education. After graduating, Davis raised her two children and taught at Gresham Elementary School from 1967 to 1986. Davis discusses the importance of teachers for raising children in a nurturing environment.

Monique Davis discusses the challenges she faced and her accomplishments as a State Representative in the Illinois General Assembly. She discusses the history of racism within Chicago Public Schools that has made it difficult for African Americans to become teachers. Davis entered politics as a volunteer for the campaigns of United States Congressman Gus Savage, Illinois State Congresswoman Monica Faith Stewart, and Chicago Mayor Harold Washington. In 1987, Davis was elected to the Illinois General Assembly, where she has fought to help the African American community by heightening awareness of infant mortality rates, increasing funds for black businesses, reforming schools and scholarships, building a State Police station in Chicago, and providing money to African American cultural institutions such as the Vivian Harsh Collection and the DuSable Museum. She reflects on the progress of African Americans in the Illinois General Assembly, including John W. E. Thomas, Cecil Partee, Charlie Chew, and Ray Ewell.
