Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Jesse Donald Madison was born on January 1, 1939 in Memphis, Tennessee to Mildred and Walter Madison. He graduated from Manassas High School in 1956 and moved to Chicago, Illinois to continue his education. Initially attending Wilson Junior College (now Kennedy-King), Madison soon transferred to Roosevelt University, where he received his B.A. degree in business administration. While in college, Madison married Frances Thornton. An accountant by occupation, Madison spent ten years in this field, rising to the position of Senior Accountant with the Maremont Corporation. While serving as Deputy Director of the Chicago Economic Development Corporation, Madison launched his political career by being elected in 1974 to the Illinois House of Representatives. During Madison's two terms in Springfield, he supported and helped pass the Public Aid Appropriations Bill, the Adult Education Bill and others. In 1976, he was voted the "Best Legislator" by the Independent Voters of Illinois.

Madison left the Illinois General Assembly at the end of 1978 and was hired by the Urban League to act as Vice-President of Finance and Administration. However, when Harold Washington decided to run for Mayor of Chicago, he asked Madison to join his campaign staff. Under Washington's leadership, Madison served as Commissioner of Consumer Services for three years. He was also Commissioner of the Chicago Park District, where he remained until Richard M. Daley became Mayor.

Since leaving city government, Madison served as the President and CEO of the Abraham Lincoln Center, a social service organization. He was also involved in many civic organizations, including the African American Family Commission, the Make-A-Wish Foundation and the Child Welfare Advisory Council.

Madison passed away on August 8, 2014, at the age of 75. He and his wife had two daughters, Tracey and Lynn, and two grandchildren.

Jesse Madison was interviewed by The HistoryMakers on August 21, 2000.

Jesse Madison was born on January 1, 1939 in Memphis, Tennessee. He had five siblings: Ernest, Walter, Eugene, Elsie, and Edna. There were weeks when his family struggled when his father, Walter Madison, only brought home only $12.50, and his mother, Mildred Peterson Madison, did not work, either. Madison spent much of his childhood playing with his sisters, as he was the second youngest between two girls. He remembers listening to his older sister, Elsie, tell stories at bedtime. Madison was a mischievous child who frequently got into trouble growing up. He attended Carnes Elementary School and Manassas High School in Memphis. Madison remembers his enjoyable high school years.

Jesse Madison describes his experience attending Manassas High School in Memphis, Tennessee, where he fought with a white student on the school bus who would not let him sit down. For fear of being caught by the police, Madison did not attend graduation. Instead, he moved to Chicago, Illinois where he attended Wilson Junior College from 1957 to 1959 and Roosevelt University from 1960 to 1968 where he studied math and accounting. He also married his high school sweetheart prior to enrolling at Roosevelt University. Madison became involved in politics helping Carter Jones run for Alderman of Chicago's 27th Ward on the West Side of Chicago in 1963. In 1972, Madison was elected to the Illinois General Assembly.
