Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Financier Barbara Bowles was born in Nashville, Tennessee, on September 17, 1947. Growing up in racially segregated Nashville, Bowles was an excellent student. She received her B.A. in mathematics with honors from Fisk University in 1968 and then accepted an offer from First National Bank of Chicago to fund her M.B.A. in finance, which she earned in 1971 from the University of Chicago, while working as a management trainee. She was the first African American in the program. Bowles spent over a decade in the investment management area of First National Bank (now Bank One) after she graduated, becoming the first African American woman there promoted to vice president. Bowles moved on to head the investor relations departments at Beatrice Companies, Inc. from 1981 to 1984 and Kraft, Inc. from 1984 to 1989.

In 1989, Bowles became the first African American female equity manager in Chicago when she established the Kenwood Group, Inc. It took six months to win her firm's first client, Quaker Oats. Since then, the Kenwood Group has attracted many other high profile clients, including: Abbott Laboratories, the Field Museum and the Chicago Transit Authority. Bowles' firm manages pension, endowment and public funds, is 100 percent minority-owned and manages assets of nearly $500 million. In 1996, Bowles became the first African American woman to launch a mutual fund with the debut of the Kenwood Growth and Income Fund. Her company has been featured in Crain's Chicago Business, Black Enterprise and various other media.

Bowles serves on the board of directors at Black & Decker Corporation; Georgia-Pacific Corporation; Wisconsin Energy Corporation; Hyde Park Bank and Trust Company of Chicago; the Chicago Urban League; Children's Memorial Hospital and Fisk University.

She is married to Earl Bowles and has one son.

Entertainer and equity manager Barbara Bowles offers rich details of life in segregated Nashville, Tennessee. Having lost her father when she was just 3 years old, Bowles recounts her mother's efforts to raise three small children. Bowles also describes the pervasive and systematic racism of Nashville and some of the great figures to rise out of the city such as John Lewis. She discusses her academic successes at Fisk University and landing a position as the first black executive trainee at the First National Bank of Chicago.

Equity fund manager and financial advisor Barbara Bowles discusses her tenure at First National Bank of Chicago. She recalls both the subtle and overt racism she faced as she rose to vice president, which eventually caused her to leave the bank for positions at Kraft Foods and Beatrice Foods. Bowles explains why she branched out to form her own equity management firm, citing a lack of opportunity for advancement. Bowles recalls the difficulties in starting her own business and being a black woman in a white male-dominated industry.

Equity funds manager and entrepreneur Barbara Bowles offers insight into the world of equity management, detailing life on the trading floor and the inner workings of her firm, The Kenwood Group. Bowles offers financial advice for African Americans and for youth interested in an investment banking career. She also reflects on her career and shares what she thinks the legacy of the Kenwood Group will be.
