Glenn Johnson was born on July 19, 1917 in Washington, Arkansas to Reola Johnson and Floyd Thompson. From a line of farmers, Johnson can trace his family history back to his paternal grandfather, Richard Johnson, who was born on the Stewart Plantation outside of Columbus, Arkansas in 1850, and owned a farm. Johnson's maternal grandmother was named Mary Carpenter. Johnson's mother inherited a 100-acre farm from her father after an estate battle with her brother. She was a housewife until her death when Johnson was two years old. Johnson's father was a farmer and a cattle raiser. After Johnson's mother died, he was raised by his father's sister, Gertrude Johnson France. Johnson describes his childhood home in Washington, Arkansas which was restored by James Pilkinton and is now part of the Historic Washington State Park in Arkansas. He also remembers his grade school years and learning to type as a student at Langston High School in Hot Springs, Arkansas. Johnson also played tackle on Langston's football team.

Video Oral History Interview with The Honorable Glenn T. Johnson,
Section A2003_002_001_002, TRT: 0:28:40 2003/01/13

Glenn Johnson describes those who influenced him during his high school years including, French Hicks, the principal of Langston High School in Hot Springs, Arkansas, and A.M.E. pastor, Thomas Primm. Primm secured a scholarship for Johnson to attend Wilberforce University in Wilberforce, Ohio. At Wilberforce, Johnson worked in the men's dormitory heating water, earning himself the nickname "Hot Water" Johnson. He became good friends with James McGee, who later the Mayor of Dayton, Ohio. Both men joined the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity. Johnson also served in the ROTC at Wilberforce and received instruction from Benjamin O. Davis. After graduating in 1940, Johnson moved to New Jersey where he worked as a dishwasher before he was drafted by the U.S. Army and sent to North Africa despite his best efforts to avoid military service. During the war, Johnson worked as a warrant officer.

Glenn Johnson served in the U.S. Army from 1942 to 1946 during World War II. He talks about his experience being stationed as a warrant officer in Oran, Algiers; Casablanca, Morocco; and Naples, Florence, and Milan in Italy. After the war, Johnson enrolled at John Marshall Law School in Chicago, Illinois in 1946 where he met and married his wife, Judge Evelyn Johnson. Upon graduating from law school in 1949, Johnson went on to work at the Illinois Attorney General's Office for seven years. Before Johnson's election as an associate judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, he spent three years at the Metropolitan Sanitary District of Greater Chicago. Johnson talks about his mentor, Claude Holman who was a member of the "Silent Six" during the tenure of Mayor Richard J. Daley. Johnson attributes the promotions during his legal career to his alignment with Holman and Daley. He reflects on his career as an appellate judge and shares his impression of Mayor Harold Washington and the Washington administration.
