Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Musician Kahil El'Zabar was born in Chicago, on November 11, 1953. One of three children growing up in a South Side neighborhood, El'Zabar fell in love with the myriad sounds of the city, from doo-wop to jazz. After attending Catholic schools in Chicago, El'Zabar went to Kennedy-King College and later to Malcolm X and Lake Forest colleges. In 1973, he traveled to Africa to attend the University of Ghana and study African music firsthand.

El'Zabar began studying African music at an early age, taking a special interest in drumming. At the age of eighteen, he joined Chicago's Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians, and by 1975 he was chairman of the
During the early 1970s, El'Zabar also formed his own musical group, the Ethnic Heritage Ensemble, and later another group, Ritual Trio, with which he still performs. His musical abilities have allowed him to play with such greats as Stevie Wonder, Paul Simon and Nina Simone, and he has toured the world with both his own groups and others. El'Zabar is active in more than just music, however. He has appeared in several films, including Mo' Money, How U Like Me Now and The Last Set. From 1996 to 1999, El'Zabar organized Traffic at Chicago's Steppenwolf Theatre, an inter-arts program featuring music and poetry.

El'Zabar has also served as an associate professor at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln and the University of Illinois at Chicago. He has published a book, Mis'taken Brilliance, and tailors clothing both for his band and for others. He is active on the boards of several organizations, including serving as the chairman of The Sun Drummer, an African American drum society, and on the board of directors of the National Campaign for Freedom of Expression. El'Zabar lives in Chicago. He has six children.

Video Oral History Interview with Kahil El'Zabar, Section
Kahil El’Zabar was born Clifton Henry Blackburn on November 11, 1953 in Chicago, Illinois. His mother, Gwendolyn Marie Finch Blackburn, was born in Chicago in 1936. His father, Clifton Henry Blackburn, Sr. was also born in Chicago in 1933 and had been a jazz drummer. Blackburn Sr. played with notable jazz artists including Dizzy Gillespie, Von Freeman, Fats Navarro and others. He worked backstage as a guard at Chicago’s Regal Theater. Where El’Zabar and his siblings were able to attend performances for free. El’Zabar attended Copernicus Elementary School in Chicago and struggled with dyslexia. The Blackburn family moved from Chicago’s Englewood neighborhood to Chatham, where El’Zabar attended the St. Clotilde Catholic School and received proper support for his dyslexia after previously being labeled learning disabled. El’Zabar attended Cathedral High School on a basketball scholarship. He describes his introduction to jazz music and playing gigs with his father as a teenager.

Kahil El’Zabar toured with saxophonist Von Freeman immediately following his graduation from Cathedral High School in Chicago, Illinois and traveled to Paris, France with saxophonist Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre at the age of seventeen. At the age of eighteen, El’Zabar married Kai El’Zabar and the two enrolled at Lake Forest College in Illinois. He spent his last year of college on a foreign exchange program at the University of Ghana; and, he never finished college. He traveled to Paris again, where he met James Baldwin and immersed himself in the jazz scene. In Chicago, he joined Sun Drummer, worked with HistoryMaker Haki Madhubutti at the Institute of Positive Education, and became chairman of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (AACM) in 1975. El’Zabar describes a transcendent moment he had while playing with the Ethnic Heritage Ensemble; he describes the jazz musicians that have influenced him; and he describes the feeling he tries to capture in his music. El’Zabar has six children.
Kahil El’Zabar formed the Ethnic Heritage Ensemble in 1973 following his experience as an exchange student in Legon, Ghana. He was named chairman of the Association for the Advancement of Creative musicians (AACM) in 1975. During the 1970s, El’Zabar began designing “Afro slick” clothing for other musicians such as Donny Hathaway and Nina Simone. During the 1980s and ‘90s, El’Zabar taught at several universities including the University of Illinois at Chicago. From 1996 to 1999, he collaborated with the Steppenwolf Theatre in Chicago, to develop ‘Traffic,’ a mutli-arts radio show that featured artists Amiri Baraka, David “Honeyboy” Edwards and others. In the early 2000s, El’Zabar formed JUBA--Joined Universal Breathing Ascending, whose style combines jazz, house, and hip hop genres. He talks about the influence of the African Diaspora in hip hop music, the state of arts education in America and his youthful perspective. He explains his philosophy as a musician and what artists can contribute to society.

Kahil El’Zabar was involved in scoring ‘Mo’ Money’ for Columbia Pictures and ‘Love Jones’ for New Line Cinema. He was named music director of the Broadway production of the ‘Lion King,’ but was frustrated by the way the African American musicians in the production were mistreated. He was forced to resign after he assaulted Nick Castle. El’Zabar explains the contributions of the African American community to: American art, American pop culture, American film and technological advancements. He also explains how rock and roll evolved from the bebop generation and beatnik subculture of the late 1940s and 1950s. El’Zabar describes African Americans rich cultural heritage and critiques contemporary African American culture.

Kahil El’Zabar helped organized Chicago’s Underground
Kahil El’Zabar helped organized Chicago’s Underground Jazz Fest from 1980 to 1983 which showcased African American artists who were not represented in the Chicago Jazz Festival. El’Zabar published a collection of poetry, ‘Mis Taken Brilliance,’ for Third World Press in 1993. In 2002, he was named Percussionist of the Year by the International Association of Jazz Critics. El’Zabar describes his role as a multi-percussionist, and lists percussion instruments he plays and record labels he has recorded for including Justin Time Records, Delmark Records, Silkheart, and others. He critiques traditional American values and the difficulty African American musicians have had transcending popular culture. El’Zabar also explains how he developed an arts administration curriculum, explains Dizzy Gillespie’s contribution to American music and explains why he decided to wear his tinted glasses at all times following a conversation with Miles Davis.
