Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

New York Congressman and Harlem native Charlie Rangel was born in New York on June 11, 1930. Raised by his mother and maternal grandfather, a Pullman porter and elevator operator, Rangel grew up in the streets of New York. After dropping out of high school, Rangel served in the U.S. Army during the Korean War, where he was seriously wounded in battle and received the Bronze Star and Purple Heart.

Rangel's tenure in Congress has been marked by a continued activism and concern for his constituency. Rangel was one of the founding members of the Congressional Black Caucus and served at one time as its chairman. He has also been active on issues of trade and human resources. In 1987, Rangel, one of the leading opponents to South African apartheid, pushed the Internal Revenue Service to eliminate tax credits for taxes paid to the apartheid government of South Africa. In 1995, he helped to create a federal "empowerment zone" in Manhattan and authored the low-income tax credit to stimulate the development of affordable housing in urban areas. Early in 2003, Rangel proposed the reinstatement of the military draft as a way to deter the use of force and promote a peaceful resolution to the standoff in Iraq. In 2007, Rangel became the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Rangel and his wife, Alma, have two children, Steven and Alicia. The Rangels, active still in many civic and community organizations, maintain their home in Harlem.

Video Oral History Interview with The Honorable Charles B. Rangel, Section A2003_201_001_001, TRT: 0:30:35 2003/07/22

The Honorable Charles B. Rangel was born on June 11, 1930 in Harlem, New York City. His father, Ralph Rangel, who may have been Puerto Rican, moved to New York City from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Rangel had a limited relationship with his father. Rangel’s maternal ancestors were enslaved in Accomack, Virginia. Rangel describes his relationship with his mother, Blanche Wharton, and grandfather, both of whom he lived with for most of his childhood. Rangel’s grandfather was an elevator operator in the criminal court building in New York City, to which Rangel credits his desire to become a lawyer. Rangel talks about his older brother, Ralph, and younger sister, Frances. His brother enlisted in the U.S. Army seven years prior to Rangel. Rangel describes his closeness to his brother who died of kidney failure. In his sister’s adult years, she became a nurse and mother. Rangel concludes by recounting anecdotes of his neighborhood’s involvement in and support for his political career.

Video Oral History Interview with The Honorable Charles B. Rangel, Section A2003_201_001_002, TRT: 0:31:00 2003/07/22

The Honorable Charles B. Rangel briefly lived in the Bronx, New York with his maternal uncle and his wife. During that time, he was the only black person in his classes at PS 89, as the rest of the neighborhood was Jewish. Rangel describes building a strong academic foundation in the two years that he lived in the Bronx prior to moving back to Harlem with his mother and maternal grandfather. Rangel reflects on growing up in Harlem and his love for the borough. Rangel describes himself as a mischievous youth. He was involved in gang activity but was also an altar boy in the Catholic Church. He was a runner for gamblers and held jobs at the local drugstore and hardware store. Rangel recalls his reputation attending public school in Harlem and tells stories of his interactions with police as a youth. Once, a man lured Rangel to his car by pretending to be a policeman. He also talks about his social club and his lifelong friends. In his late twenties, Rangel worked as a clerk at the Hotel Theresa in Harlem.
