Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

College president Dr. Paul Phillips Cooke was born on June 29, 1917 in New York City to Mamie Kathleen Phillips and Louis Philips Cooke, Sr. Cooke attended Garrison Elementary School and Garnet-Patterson Junior High School, both in Washington, D.C. He earned a diploma from Dunbar High School where he played on the baseball team and was a member of the Cadet Corps. During his senior year in 1933, his company was asked to perform at a wreath laying ceremony at Arlington National Cemetery.

From 1933 to 1937, Cooke attended Miner Teachers College in Washington, D.C. where he earned his B.S. degree. He continued his studies at New York University where he earned his M.A. degree in education. In 1943, Cooke earned another M.A. degree in English from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., and completed his studies with an Ed.D. degree from Columbia University in 1947. While attending Columbia, Cooke was drafted and served in the U.S. Army between 1945 and 1946, after which he was honorably discharged with the rank of corporal. In 1951, Cooke worked to assist Washington D.C. area African American deaf children who were being sent out of the city for their education while white deaf students from the city were being taught at Kendall School. Cooke worked as a professor at the District of Columbia Teachers College for twenty-two years until 1966 when he was appointed president of the college and served in that post until 1974. In 1978, Cooke worked as a consultant for the World Peace Through Law Center, an organization that advocates for poor and disadvantaged people.

Cooke was a member of the World Veterans Federation, the American Veteran's Committee and served as an officer for the Catholic Interracial Council of Washington, D.C. In 1983, Paul Phillips Cooke Day was declared in Washington, D.C. by former Mayor Marion Barry and in 1986, the University of the District of Columbia awarded him with an honorary degree and also gave him the U.D.C. Legacy Award in 2004. The university also established the Paul Phillips Cooke Lecture Series and the Paul Phillips Cooke Scholarship Program. Cooke was also active in his fraternity, Kappa Alpha Psi, Inc., which awarded him the Laurel Wreath in 1995.

Cooke passed away on July 4, 2010.

Video Oral History Interview with Paul Cooke, Section A2004_009_001_001, TRT: 0:27:44 2004/03/01

Paul Cooke was born on June 29, 1917 in New York, New York. His mother Mamie Philipps Cooke was born 1883 and grew up in Washington, D.C. where she attended M Street High School and Howard University. While his maternal grandfather was born into slavery in South Carolina, his paternal grandfather Francis Rudolph Cooke was not; rather, he was an effective grocer whose stalls were eventually demolished and replaced by the National Archives and Records Administration. Cooke’s father, Louis Cooke, was a first class machinist in the U.S. Navy during World War I. Cooke describes his earliest memories in Washington, D.C. where he and his brother grew up, near the YMCA, U Street, and segregated theaters, such as the Lincoln, Circle and Republic theaters. He also describes his experiences as a student at Garrison Elementary School, Garnet-Patterson Junior High School, and Dunbar High School in the late 1920s and early 1930s, including influential teachers and former classmates.

Paul Cooke describes his involvement in instances of civil obedience during the late 1940s and early 1950s. Most notably, he recalls desegregation activities at Washington D.C.’s National Theater, as well as the renowned 1952 court case, Miller v. Board of Education of District of Columbia whereby deaf black children were sent to Baltimore, Maryland for specialized education while deaf white children were able to attend schools within Washington, D.C. Cooke describes his and the American Veterans Committee’s involvement in both the Miller and the “Thompson restaurant case.” Both cases ultimately limited racial exclusion in Washington, D.C. in the 1950s. He addresses Washington, D.C.’s 1968 race riots, specifically the impact of the fire for his family and the city. Cooke also talks about his work with World Peace Through Law and at Beacon College in Washington, D.C. He reflects upon his accomplishments and legacy.
