Video Oral History Interview with Maureen Forte, Section
A2004_150_001_001, TRT: 0:28:50 2004/08/27

Maureen Forte was born on October 1, 1950 in Chicago, Illinois. She talks about her family history. Her mother, Georgia Ann Jones (nee Knowles), was born on in Welsh, West Virginia in 1919. Her father, Willis Jones Sr., was born in 1909 in West Virginia. Forte's mother was a housewife and a stay-at-home mom. Her father worked several jobs to support their family of six. Most notably, he was a coal miner in West Virginia, from which he contracted black lung disease. Several of Forte's siblings also have health problems due to coal dust exposure. Her father's first cousin was HistoryMaker Reverend Fred Shuttlesworth, a prominent civil rights leader. Forte talks about growing up in the Altgeld Gardens public housing project in the Park Manor neighborhood of Chicago, Illinois with her three older siblings: Mary, Millie, and Willis. She also describes her childhood personality and her grade school years. In Chicago, Forte attended McCosh Elementary School and Englewood High School.

Maureen Forte describes her experience at Englewood High School in Chicago, Illinois where she encountered racist bullying during her freshman year. After graduating, Forte attended Chicago State University where she earned a B.A. degree in education. As an undergraduate, Forte took drama courses at Kennedy-King College in Chicago, which granted Forte a position performing in Cole Porter's 'Paint Your Wagon' with the USO (United Service Organization) in Seoul, Korea in 1971. After graduating from Chicago State in 1974, Forte worked as a schoolteacher for many years. Her experiences as a student, teacher, and community activist, as well as the targeted violence against blacks occurring around the country in the 1960s, propelled Forte to become more politically involved in the fight for equality. She became the vice president of the south suburban chapter of the NAACP in Chicago, and also started her own chapter of Rainbow/PUSH. Forte worked with Keith Anderson to advocate on behalf the “Decatur Seven” in 1999.
