Reverend Emmanuel McCall was born on February 4, 1936 in Sharon, Pennsylvania. His mother, Myra Mae Preston McCall, was born in Wheatland, Pennsylvania in 1918. Her father was an African American steelworker; her mother was a Cherokee woman who cooked and cleaned at the mills. McCall's father, George McCall, was born in Cheraw, South Carolina in 1913 and was of Gullah heritage. When McCall's father was fourteen years old, he escaped being lynched and resettled in West Middlesex, Pennsylvania with his adoptive father, a preacher who later gave McCall his name, Emmanuel Lemuel, and predicted that he would be called to ministry. McCall grew up in a farming community in Pennsylvania; his family were the only African Americans in the area. The others were recent European immigrants. Neighbors often helped each other with farm work and shared foods from their various ethnic communities. He did not experience racial hostility or segregation until he traveled to Louisville, Kentucky to attend Simmons Bible College.

Reverend Emmanuel McCall and his two younger siblings attended Stoney Hill, a one-room schoolhouse in rural Pennsylvania. His teacher taught seven grades over the course of each day, rotating between students and subjects in fifteen minute intervals. After seventh grade, he attended West Middlesex Joint Consolidated School in Pennsylvania; his knowledge about butchering farm animals gave him an edge in his biology classes. Fellow churchgoers in Wheatland, Pennsylvania served as McCall's role models. When he was eight, he felt a call to ministry. At age fourteen, he was presented to the church by his pastor and learned of his adoptive grandfather's prediction that he would be a preacher. McCall studied English and literature at the University of Louisville. After graduating, he enrolled at The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, taught at Simmons Bible College and married. In 1960, he began pastoring 28th Street Baptist Church where he remained for eight years before moving to Atlanta, Georgia in 1968.

Reverend Emmanuel McCall attended The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Kentucky. He was the only African American on campus in 1959. There were other black students from the Caribbean and Africa, but they were given preferential treatment. Attempting to combat racism, white classmates insisted that he and other students of color be allowed to remain in the Baptist Student Union. After seminary, he started an interracial ministers' conference with John Claypool and became its second president. In 1968, he became the first African American to obtain an executive position in the Southern Baptist Convention. He was also hired at the Home Board Mission and worked there until 1991. McCall established Christian Fellowship Baptist Church in College Park, Georgia after the mismanagement at Union Baptist Church in Atlanta caused a large number of parishioners to leave. McCall was asked to pastor the new church, which grew from 219 on the first Sunday to more than 1,640 at the time of the interview.

Reverend Emmanuel McCall led his first congregation from 1960 to 1968, 28th Street Baptist Church in Louisville, Kentucky. The secretary at Simmons Bible College recommended him after a series of problems with their previous pastor. His wife led the choir and he was able to grow the congregation significantly. McCall decided to complete his doctorate in ministry while still working for the Home Mission Board in Atlanta. Balancing both was challenging, but he was able to recruit a fellow classmate to join the Home Mission Board. He graduated from Emory University in 1976. In 1991, he unexpectedly returned to ministry. After helping to establish Christian Fellowship Baptist Church in College Park, he was asked to pastor it. As pastor, he found it necessary to rebuild trust with the congregation, who had left a church where the pastor misused their money. McCall talks about his pedagogy as a pastor and educator, his thoughts on gospel rap, changes in the black church since the 1980s and books he has written.

Reverend Emmanuel McCall travelled extensively throughout the Americas, Asia, Europe, Africa, and Australia for his work with the Home Mission Board. On McCall's first trip to Africa, he went to Liberia. Prior to him, the only Southern Baptists that many had seen there were white. He was suspected to be a spy for the CIA, but eventually became an advocate in addressing Liberians' concerns regarding poor treatment of local people by missionaries. At the time of the interview, he had a number of critiques for the Southern Baptist Convention leadership and the politics associated with fundamentalism. McCall does not think that such resources as the African Heritage Bible or ethnic depictions of Jesus provide accurate historical representations. He describes his hopes and concerns for the African American community and reflects upon his life, legacy, and how he would like to be remembered. McCall concludes by offering a message to future generations and narrating his photographs.
