Video Oral History Interview with Ronald H. Brewington, Section A2005_112_001_001, TRT: 0:28:44 2005/04/28

Ronald H. Brewington was born on November 2, 1946 in New York City. His mother, Mosetta Smalls, the great-granddaughter of Robert Smalls, famed for commandeering a Confederate ship to bring himself and seventeen other slaves to freedom during the Civil War, and the niece of Ed Smalls, proprietor of Smalls Paradise in Harlem, was born on August 15, 1917 in Charleston, South Carolina. She moved to New York City when she was four years old. His father, William Brewington, was born on December 24, 1918 in Broadway, North Carolina. After his parents divorced in his infancy, Brewington did not reconnect with his father until he was twenty-one. Brewington’s mother instilled discipline and good manners while single-handedly raising him and his twin brother, Rudolph, and working as a cook and cook manager for the New York City Board of Education. Brewington remembers wandering the city with his brother, enjoying the food from street vendors and seeing Moms Mabley and Chuck Jackson perform at the Apollo Theater.
Ronald H. Brewington loved listening to his favorite disc jockey, Frankie Crocker, during his childhood. Growing up in Harlem during the 1960s, Brewington encountered well-known political figures like Malcolm X and Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. and enjoyed reading books at the Countee Cullen Branch of the New York Public Library. His mother’s conversion to Catholicism led her to place him and his brother in Catholic grade schools. At Aviation High School, Brewington learned aviation mechanics, ran track and field and was in student government. With his twin brother in the U.S. Marine Corps, Brewington joined the U.S. Navy in 1964. After volunteering to be a training device man, he was sent to Memphis, Tennessee where a racist café owner refused him service while brandishing a shotgun. Alerted by Brewington, the Memphis NAACP picketed the café, causing it to close. Brewington first became involved with broadcasting while stationed in Corpus Christi, Texas after being hired as a disc jockey for KEYS-AM.

Ronald H. Brewington started his broadcasting career in 1975 at KEYS AM while stationed in Corpus Christi, Texas. He then became public service director for KEXX FM radio, where he also hosted a weekly community program for which he interviewed Douglas Edwards of CBS Evening News. In 1977, Brewington attained the rank of chief journalist in the U.S. Navy. He was deployed to the Naval Air Facility Adak on the Aleutian Islands of Alaska, the Naval Communications Station on Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean, and USS New Jersey in Long Beach, California, where he served as public affair officer before retiring in 1985. Brewington worked as an assistant director for the Bob Hope Hollywood USO Club. He then headed Sheridan Broadcasting Network’s news bureau in Los Angeles, California, which was later renamed the American Urban Network. Brewington talks about covering the 1984 Summer Olympics, the 1984 Democratic National Convention, the 1992 Los Angeles
Ronald H. Brewington was attending a rally for HistoryMaker The Honorable Maxine Waters in 1984 when he learned that Motown artist Marvin Gaye had been shot and killed. Since then, Brewington has been involved with the Marvin P. Gaye, Jr. Memorial Foundation’s efforts to memorialize the singer. He produced the radio documentary ‘Marvin Gaye, Pride and Joy’ and campaigned to honor Gaye with a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. At the time of the interview, Brewington was working to have a commemorative stamp produced for Marvin Gaye and to create scholarships in his name. Brewington encountered O.J. Simpson after reporting on his criminal and civil trials. He also became known among Hollywood stars for his trademark of handing out Eisenhower silver dollars. Since being diagnosed with prostate cancer in 1999, Brewington has educated others about the disease through his work with the Real Men Cook Foundation. He also has raised awareness about the ethnic cleansing in Darfur.

Ronald H. Brewington, at the time of the interview, hosted a Comcast show, ‘Minute by Minute,’ which features community members and local events in Los Angeles. Inspired by the stories of the original Tuskegee Airmen he encountered, Brewington joined the Los Angeles chapter of Tuskegee Airmen Inc., which was campaigning for a commemorative postage stamp as well as a Congressional Gold Medal for the Airmen when the interview occurred. As an adjunct professor, Brewington teaches broadcasting and journalism at Santa Monica College and West Los Angeles College. Brewington talks about his four children, Governor Schwarzenegger’s remarks on immigration in California, his respect for Dick Clark, and the fight that broke out at the 2004 Vibe Awards. Brewington concludes his interview by reflecting on his hopes and concerns for the African American community, his legacy, and how he would like to be remembered. He narrates his photographs.
