Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Retired educator and community volunteer Georgia Nelle Smith Dickens, nicknamed Gee Gee, was born on December 24, 1920, in Atlanta, Georgia. Both of Dickens's parents, Reverend Harvey Miles Smith and Stella Bryant Smith, were college educated individuals who graduated from Morehouse College and Atlanta University respectively. Dickens's parents instilled in her a sense of responsibility, respect for self, and a passion for education. Dickens was raised in Atlanta, Georgia, attending E.R. Carter Elementary School; she went on to attend Madison High School where she graduated in 1937, at the age of fifteen, as the class salutatorian. In 1938, Dickens enrolled in Spelman College where she was voted Miss Personality by her peers; she graduated in 1942.

Dickens started her career as an educator in 1942 in Albany, Georgia; that same year, she married Morehouse College graduate Robert D. Dickens. Dickens moved back to Atlanta and began teaching at Young Street Elementary School, where she enjoyed working with children. While teaching, Dickens volunteered for the Children’s Alliance Theater Guild; she also chaired the United Negro College Fund Telethon and co-chaired the Volunteers Telephone Committee and the Democratic National Convention. After working in the Atlanta Public School System for forty-three years, she retired from teaching in 1982.

Dickens won several awards for her achievements and volunteerism; she was honored as an outstanding volunteer by the United Negro College Fund Telethon. In 1989 Dickens was presented with the President’s Award by the Atlanta Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., Essence magazine’s Ambassador Award; in 2001 she was awarded the Alumnae Achievement Award in Civic Service by Spelman College; in 2003 she won the National Visionary Leadership Award.

Dickens and her husband raised one son.

Video Oral History Interview with Georgia Dickens, Section A2005_141_001_001, TRT: 0:28:00 2005/06/21

Georgia Dickens was born on December 24, 1920 in Atlanta, Georgia to Stella Bryant Smith and Harvey Miles Smith. Her mother’s family was from West Point, Georgia and her mother studied to become a teacher at Spelman College. Her father, the son of a Baptist preacher, attended Morehouse College. He was close friends with Martin Luther King, Sr. Dickens’ father preached at different churches in the South, including Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church in Albany, Georgia, where Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. held meetings during the Albany Movement. The family moved back to Atlanta in 1945 after Dickens’ father fell ill. Dickens was the oldest of four siblings, which included HistoryMaker Dr. Harvey Smith. An active child, she inherited her father’s tendency to take charge. She remembers the smell of the woods and falling in a stream as a child. Dickens took dancing and swimming lessons. While attending Spelman College, she sang in glee club and choir with teachers Willis Laurence James and Kemper Harreld.

Georgia Dickens’ maternal grandfather, Henry Bryant, built many of the houses in Atlanta, Georgia in the 1920s. Dickens attended E.R. Carter Elementary School before transferring to Chadwick School. Her childhood neighbors included W.E.B. Du Bois, HistoryMaker Dr. Asa Yancey, Sr. and Dr. Benjamin Mays, and she learned French from HistoryMaker Mercer Cook. Growing up, Dickens’ grandmother taught her the value of volunteerism. Dickens moved to Albany, Georgia, where her father founded Mount Zion Baptist Church. While there, Dickens attended Madison High School, graduating as salutatorian at age sixteen. Dickens attended Georgia Normal and Agricultural College in Albany for a year before transferring to Spelman College in 1938. At Spelman, Dickens joined the English and dance clubs and was known for her outgoing personality. Dickens married Morehouse graduate Robert D. Dickens. Her son, Robert D. Dickens, Jr., was born in 1943. In 1945, Dickens started her teaching career at Young Street Elementary School.

Georgia Dickens taught humanities and arts classes at Atlanta’s segregated Young Street Elementary School where the classes were overcrowded. Realizing that one of her students was Benny Andrews’ niece, Dickens invited him to give an art lesson to her class. Dickens’ popular school arts programs were attended by Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s mother, Alberta King, and her father, Adam Daniel Williams. Since Dickens’ father was a friend of Martin Luther King, Sr., Dickens grew up with King and his sister, HistoryMaker Christine King Farris. She describes King’s personality and his civil rights efforts with HistoryMaker Reverend Dr. Wyatt Tee Walker. As an art coordinator, Dickens organized programs at three schools in Atlanta. Dickens worked on HistoryMaker John Lewis’ 1977 congressional campaign. In 1979, Dickens became a member of the Alliance
In 1979, Dickens became a member of the Alliance Children's Theatre Guild. After retiring in 1982, Dickens devoted her time to volunteer work at Gate City Day Nursery Association and Woodruff Arts Center.

Georgia Dickens recalls her parents telling her about a race riot they lived through in her childhood neighborhood in Atlanta, Georgia in 1906. Dickens was friends with HistoryMaker Julian Bond and worked on his congressional campaign. She also volunteered for HistoryMaker John Lewis' congressional campaign. Since its inception in 1987, Dickens has been involved in the National Black Arts Festival, which was co-founded by Michael Lomax and HistoryMaker Stephanie Hughley. Dickens describes her hopes and concerns for the African America community and her family. She shares her thoughts about the social changes she has witnessed at Spelman College, and her thoughts about the way social etiquette has changed in her lifetime. Dickens concludes the interview by reflecting upon her legacy, her life and how she would like to be remembered.
