Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Larry Dingle was born in rural Dillon, South Carolina, on June 26, 1949. Dingle was an agent of change in his hometown of Dillon, South Carolina; he desegregated the high school closest to his home. From there, Dingle attended Morehouse College to pursue his undergraduate education; he transferred to Georgia State University, where he was awarded his B.A. degree in 1974, and his J.D. degree in 1987, enabling him to practice law.

Dingle was a police officer for the City of Atlanta and then worked for the City of Atlanta from 1969 to 1990 as a department head and Clerk of Council. It is in this capacity that Dingle gained the confidence and support of then Mayors Maynard Jackson and Andrew Young as a civil servant of considerable talent. From 1990 to 1997, Dingle worked as a partner at the law firm of Peterson, Dillard, Young, Asselin and Powell. Dingle later became a partner at Wilson, Brock, and Irby, L.L.C., where he earned great prestige through his representation of clients such as Saks Fifth Avenue.

Dingle served on the Board of Directors of Southeast Energy; the Bank of North Georgia; Central Fulton Senior Services; and Georgia State University's Board of Visitors. Dingle was a member of the Georgia Bar Association for twenty years. In 1990, Dingle co-authored Major Land Use Laws in Georgia, which was published by the National Business Institute, Inc. Dingle earned distinction in the City of Atlanta as a civil servant and attorney and was recognized nationally for contributions to the practice of law.

Larry Dingle was born on June 26, 1949 in Dillon County, South Carolina. He was raised by his maternal grandparents, Charity and Eugene Dingle, and has limited knowledge of his parents. Dingle describes growing up in a small farm community in which all the land was owned by African Americans, and the major crops were tobacco and cotton. His family attended a church across the street from the farm. The community had a strong sense of ownership and collective responsibility over the local children. Dingle describes the sights, sounds, and smells of his childhood. He also describes an influential childhood mentor and watching Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. on television. Dingle attended Latta Elementary School and integrated Latta High School in Latta, South Carolina at age sixteen. Though he struggled with reading and his English teacher provided no support, the school librarian helped him to read at a college level. Dingle also recalls a teacher's advice on doing his best with standardized testing.

Larry Dingle integrated Latta High School in Latta, South Carolina in 1965. Dingle played basketball as a senior and was well-treated by his coach, who was white. In classrooms, however, he was ostracized by other students. Dingle had aspirations to learn French and become a lawyer. He attended Morehouse College in Atlanta, Georgia for two years before getting married. He then worked as a police officer in Atlanta, taking classes at Georgia State University, where he earned his B.A. degree in 1974. Dingle describes meeting Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson while working as a police officer and advocating for higher ranking African American policemen. He later left the force and worked for the City of Atlanta under Jackson. Dingle talks about earning his law degree from Georgia State in 1987 and beginning his career with help from HistoryMakers Marvin Arrington and Carl Ware. He also talks about his family and offers parenting advice. Dingle reflects upon his legacy and memorable court cases at Phipps Law Firm.
