Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Angeles LaRose Patricia Echols was born January 11, 1957, in Memphis, Tennessee, to Will Eva Harmon Echols and J.D. Echols. Echols attended Georgia Elementary School, Hamilton Middle School, and graduated from Hamilton High School in 1975. A singer actress, model, and dancer, Echols, who performed in Erma Clayton’s An Evening of Soul review in Memphis, was awarded $5,000 by Willard Straight Hall to produce the show for Cornell University. Echols earned her B.A. degree in psychology from Cornell University in 1979, and also completed a one-year graduate program at Cornell in Arts and Sciences. At the time of her interview, Echols was preparing for a Ph.D. program in Education and Child Development and Human Development.

From 1980 to 1989, Echols worked in a variety of social service and educational programs that included the Harvard University Upward Bound Program; Alexander Berger Junior High School #139 in Bronx, New York; Holy Name Multipurpose Center, Memphis; and Hale House, New York City. During that time period, Echols also landed acting and modeling jobs. In 1987, Echols was cast in the off Broadway production of Staggerlee; in 1989, she moved to Los Angeles and was cast in the film She Knows Too Much, and became artistic program director of the Parks Arts Program in Pasadena, California. That same year, Echols began tutoring two children after school in her own apartment. As her program began to grow, Echols founded Educating Young Minds (EYM). From 1990 to 1994, Echols taught math and English at Trinity Lutheran School in Los Angeles, and film history at Chaffey College in Rancho Cucamonga. In 1994, Echols made EYM her full-time work; working cooperatively with the Los Angeles Unified School District, EYM eventually would provide an attractive learning environment for 350 inner city youth, from kindergarten through high school.

Echols has been the recipient of numerous honors. In 2003, Echols was selected as part of the President’s Council of Cornell Women. Echols received the 2003 PRISM Award in education from Minorities in Business magazine; KTLA’s “Unsung Heroes Award”; ACT 1’s Angel of Education Award; Crenshaw Christian Center’s Lifetime Achievement Award; Oscar Joel Bryant’s Community Humanitarian Award; the Jackie Robinson and United Way’s Community Service Awards. Other awards from Yvonne Braithwaite-Burke, the City of Los Angeles, the California State Assembly and the United States Senate speak to the community support of Echols and EYM. In 2005, Echols portrayed the title character in Sojourner, a play about 19th century black activist Sojourner Truth.

Angeles Echols was born on January 11, 1957 in Memphis, Tennessee to Will Eva Harmon Echols and J.D. Echols. Echols’ mother was born on March 13, 1935 in Yazoo City, Mississippi, one of eighteen children born to Jessie Harmon. While attending college in Memphis, she became pregnant, and her son, Earl, was adopted by one of her brothers. Echols’ parents met and started a family in Memphis before separating when she was three years old. Growing up in the LeMoyne Gardens projects of Memphis, Echols lived near her paternal grandparents, Katie Franklin and Thomas Echols, and her paternal aunt, Jamila Echols. She maintained a close relationship with them despite being estranged from her father. Echols describes her mother’s strength, kindness and strict Angeles Echols was raised by her mother, Will Eva Harmon Echols, in Memphis’ LeMoyne Gardens projects until she was about twelve years old. Echols recalls her nurturing neighbors, her mother’s support and the familiar sounds of life in the projects. She attended Georgia Avenue Elementary School, Hamilton Elementary School, Hamilton Middle School and Hamilton High School, where she enjoyed math and the arts. She felt socially isolated until joining the production of HistoryMaker Erma L. Clanton’s play ‘Roots, Rhymes & Righteous Times (An Evening of Soul),’ alongside HistoryMaker Isaac Hayes. After performing in the play, she provided background vocals for Stax Records. Upon graduating from high school in 1975, Echols attended Cornell University, where she obtained her bachelor’s degree in science while maintaining her interest in drama. In 1979, she enrolled in the graduate program in drama, but quit a year later when she realized that acting was not her calling. She also reflects upon the meaning of her name.

Angeles Echols lived in New York City throughout the 1980s, where she landed roles in productions such as ‘The Wiz,’ modeled, and taught at various summer school programs, including one at Alexander Burger Junior High School in the Bronx. In 1987, Echols was cast in the off-Broadway production of ‘Staggerlee.’ Disillusioned with her career in New York, she moved to Los Angeles in 1989. Six months later, she was cast in the film ‘She Knows Too Much.’ From 1990 to 1994, Echols taught... math and English at Trinity Lutheran School, and film history at Chaffey College in Rancho Cucamonga. She also began tutoring children after school in her own apartment. As her tutoring program grew, Echols founded Educating Young Minds (EYM). Her funders included Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer’s Samuel Goldwyn, Jr. Through word-of-mouth recruitment and a high standard of accountability for each student in the program, EYM achieved a 100 percent high school graduation rate and an 89.9 percent four-year collegiate graduation rate.

Angeles Echols incorporated her nonprofit tutoring program, Educating Young Minds (EYM), in Los Angeles, California in the early 1990s. Working cooperatively with the Los Angeles Unified School District, EYM provides an attractive learning environment and state-of-the-art facility for hundreds of inner city youth ranging from kindergarten to college-aged, many of whom struggle with poverty, gangs and drugs. EYM provides each of its students with a $6,000 to $10,000 college scholarship. Echols chose to forfeit her personal ambitions for wealth to instead focus on developing her program. Echols reflects upon her students’ success stories, her disciplinary interventions, her commitment to EYM, and her dream of opening more centers in California and nationwide. Echols describes her hopes and concerns for the African American community and how she addresses cultural differences among students at EYM.
