Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Actress Hattie Mae Winston was born in Lexington, Mississippi, on March 3, 1945, to Selena Thurmond Winston and Roosevelt Love Winston. Winston was raised by her grandmother, Cora Thurmond, in nearby Greenville, Mississippi. Attending Washington Irving High School in New York City, Winston graduated in 1963; throughout her academic career she was an accomplished student and an exceptionally talented vocalist. Winston attended Howard University in Washington, D.C. after receiving a full voice scholarship.
Winston moved back to New York City after one year at Howard and enrolled in an actor’s group study workshop; success came quickly. In 1968, Winston became a replacement performer in Hair, in 1969 obtained a part in Does a Tiger Wear a Necktie?, and in 1970 was cast in The Me Nobody Knows, all of which were significant Broadway roles. In 1971, Winston was cast in a replacement role in Two Gentlemen of Verona. In 1983, Winston scored a starring role in the critically acclaimed Broadway play The Tap Dance Kid. Winston’s roles in To Take Up Arms and Up the Mountain earned her two Los Angeles Critics Drama-Logue awards; throughout her career, she received a variety of other theatrical honors, including two Obie Awards (for Mother Courage and The Michigan), CEBA Awards, and an Audelco Award for her contributions to the world of theater. Winston also worked as an independent producer and director, and was responsible for reviving Langston Hughes’s Black Nativity off-Broadway.

Winston worked extensively in the worlds of television and film; she had a regular role on the Emmy-award winning PBS-TV series The Electric Company, where she played Sylvia, in addition to playing Gloria Davis in the critically acclaimed series Homefront. Winston’s other television credits include Nurse, E.R., Port Charles, The Parent Hood, Malcolm & Eddie, The Smart Guy, Scrubs, and Becker. Winston’s film credits include Jackie Brown, Meet the Deedles, Beverly Hills Cop III, and Clint Eastwood’s True Crime.

Video Oral History Interview with Hattie Winston Wheeler, Section A2005_237_001_001, TRT: 0:29:00 2005/10/07

Hattie Winston was born on March 3, 1945 in Lexington, Mississippi to Selena Thurmond Winston and Roosevelt Love Winston. Her paternal great-great-grandmother, Kizzie Rancher, was a farmer in Sumter County, Alabama, and raised Winston’s grandmother, Ola Rancher Winston, who was born in 1894. Her father, Roosevelt Winston, was born in Morgan County, Mississippi in 1925, and grew up on his family’s farm. Winston recalls her grandfather, William Love Winston’s home as a two-room shack with a potbelly stove, where pig roasts were often held at festival times. Her father did not finish high school, and joined the U.S. Navy as a young man. When she was still a toddler, her biological mother abandoned the family. Winston was then raised by her paternal aunt, Bertha Mae Winston Williams. Few of her relatives on her father’s side were literate, but her adoptive mother and other family members had great hope that Winston would become the first in the family to complete her education.

Hattie Winston was adopted by her paternal aunt and uncle, Bertha Mae Winston Williams and Lewis Pampley, and considered them her parents. She grew up in Greenville, Mississippi, where her adoptive mother was a domestic servant and her adoptive father was a foreman at the lumber mill, where he supervised both white and black workers. Winston recalls her childhood scorn toward whites who addressed her adoptive mother by her first name, and how her adoptive father bought her a bicycle. Her adoptive mother ran an illegal bootlegging business, so Winston was taught how to cover her tracks in the event of police investigation. Winston attended Sacred Heart School in Greenville, a Catholic school where most of her teachers were white nuns, although her family was not Catholic. She was often teased and attacked by students from the community’s public school, Coleman High School, until her adoptive mother urged her to fight back. Winston recalls how her adoptive parents were religious counselors in the community.

Hattie Winston enjoyed singing while growing up in Greenville, Mississippi, and dreamed of entering show business. She saw movies starring black actors like Dorothy Dandridge and Herb Jeffries at Bridges’ Theatre in Greenville. Winston reflects on the Civil Rights Movement in Mississippi and the murder of Emmett Till. After experiencing prejudice and harassment in the South, she moved to New York City at the age of thirteen, but returned to Mississippi after a year to care for her adoptive mother, Bertha Mae Winston Williams. At the age of fifteen, Winston moved to New York City for good, and lived with her father, Roosevelt Love Winston, in the Lower East Side. She attended Washington Irving High School, where she joined the drama club and qualified for the all-city choir. After experiencing troubles at home, she left to live with the family of her best friend, Adrienne Thomas, in the Chelsea Houses projects. She entered Howard University in 1963 with a full scholarship to Hattie Winston dropped out of Howard University in Washington, D.C. after one year in order to pursue an acting career in New York City. In 1964, she joined the Group Theater Workshop, founded by HistoryMaker Robert Hooks, where she performed alongside HistoryMakers Douglas Turner Ward and Barbara Ann Teer. Winston performed in plays like ‘The Prodigal Son’ and Ward’s ‘Happy Ending/Day of Absence,’ and was a founding member of the Negro Ensemble Company in 1967. She recalls the company’s training regimen and commitment to ensemble work. In 1969, the Negro Ensemble Company represented the U.S. at the World Theatre Season in London, England, presenting ‘Song of the Lusitanian Bogey.’ In 1970, Winston made her first Broadway appearance in the musical 'The Me Nobody Knows.' She joined the cast of the TV series 'The Electric Company' in 1973, and later did promotional work for brands like Zest soap and American Airlines. Winston also recalls being neighbors with HistoryMaker Whoopi Goldberg in the Chelsea Houses.

Hattie Winston was introduced to voiceover acting by Adolph Caesar. She often had to omit mention of her race in order to be considered for jobs. Her television credits include ‘Nurse’ with Michael Learned in the early 1980s, ‘Homefront’ with Dick Anthony Williams in the early 1990s, and ‘Becker’ with Ted Danson from 1998 to 2004. Winston also appeared in movies, including ‘Jackie Brown’ with Samuel L. Jackson, ‘True Crime’ with Clint Eastwood, and ‘Clara’s Heart’ with HistoryMaker Whoopi Goldberg, her former neighbor in New York City. Winston is active in the community as a member of the anti-domestic violence organization Break the Cycle, the co-founder of Onyx Village, and a member of the CEO committee of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists. She premiered her play 'The Slave Narratives’ at the Denver Center for the Performing Arts.
with a cast including HistoryMakers James Avery and Charles Weldon. Winston also describes how she would like to be remembered and narrates her photographs.
