Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Ralph Sheldon Tyler, CEO and president of Ralph Tyler Companies and the son of the founder Ralph C. Tyler and Mabel Sandra Tyler, was born on June 30, 1950 in Cleveland, Ohio. Tracing his ancestors back to slavery through the 1700's, Tyler is a descendent of James Seneca Tyler, the first African American elected clerk of the Ohio House of Representatives. Tyler's grandfather, Ralph M. Tyler, was an engineer as was his father, Ralph C. Tyler, a former captain of the Ohio State University Track Team, who attended Cleveland's Central High School with Langston Hughes. Ralph C. Tyler was the first licensed black civil engineer in Ohio and formed Ralph Tyler Companies in 1978.

Tyler grew up in Cleveland where he attended Miles Standish Elementary School, Moses Cleveland School, Howe Military School and graduated from Shaker Heights High School in 1968. He earned his B.A. degree from Ohio University and his J.D. degree from Case Western Reserve University Law School in 1974.

Tyler's professional career includes positions with Citibank in New York City and TRW in Cleveland where responsibilities ranged from managing state government relations to overseeing legal and regulatory matters. Prior to joining his father's business, Tyler served as executive director of the Greater Cleveland Roundtable where he coordinated the group's activities in education, labor management, race relations and minority economic development.

As CEO and president of Ralph Tyler Companies, Tyler has contributed to the Cleveland community through development projects like the Cleveland Public Library, the Federal Courthouse, the Hopkins Airport expansion and the Cleveland Browns Stadium. The firm has offices in Detroit, Newark, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Toledo. Ralph Tyler Companies is a two time recipient of the Weatherhead 100 Award from Case Western Reserve University. A volunteer for a number of causes in Cleveland, Tyler gives six to seven minority scholarships to young engineering students each year.

Residing in the Cleveland area, Tyler is married to a direct descendent of black inventor, Garrett A. Morgan.

Ralph Tyler's great-grandfather, Ralph Waldo Tyler, a friend of Booker T. Washington and W.E.B. Du Bois, wrote about the riots that followed World War I and reported his findings to the U.S. government. Tyler's grandfather, Ralph M. Tyler, was Cleveland's Majestic Hotel's manager, where Tyler's father, Ralph C. Tyler, worked as a busboy and bellhop, and his childhood friends were Mayor Carl Stokes and Louis Stokes. Tyler's grandfather studied engineering at Carnegie Institute of Technology and taught at Langston University in Oklahoma. Tyler's parents met in Cleveland at a social function. They dated long distance until marrying and settling in Cleveland, where Tyler's mother taught in the public schools for thirty years. In the early 1950s, Tyler's father became the State of Ohio's first licensed African American civil engineer surveyor. In 1978, Tyler's father founded Ralph C. Tyler P.E. P.S., Inc. Tyler describes his parents' personalities and recalls attending Howe Military Academy in Howe, Indiana.

Ralph Tyler remembers Cleveland, Ohio's Mt. Zion Congregational Church and Leroy Ozanne's Ozanne Construction Company. Tyler attended Miles Standish Elementary School and Charles W. Eliot Middle School before transferring to Indiana's Howe Military Academy, where he became a top student. Unhappy with the school's refusal to advance his ranking, Tyler returned home to attend Shaker Heights High School in Ohio. Even though he was no longer interested in a law career, Tyler earned his degree from Case Western Reserve University School of Law in Cleveland to avoid serving in the Vietnam War. Upon graduating, he worked at Citibank in New York City and TRW, Inc. in Ohio. When his father fell ill after a heart attack, Tyler took over his company, Ralph C. Tyler, P.E. P.S., Inc., where he worked to prove himself as an engineer. Tyler describes his business as an engineering and architecture firm in program and construction management. Tyler also shares his hopes and concerns for the African American community.
