Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Veteran filmmaker Stanley Earl Nelson, Jr., was born on June 8, 1951, in New York City. He attended New Lincoln School, a Manhattan private school, from kindergarten through high school. He attended Beloit College in Wisconsin, and later transferred to six different colleges including New York University, Morris Brown, and Hunter College. In 1976, he received his B.F.A. degree from the Leonard Davis Film School at the City University of New York.
Upon graduating, Nelson worked as an assistant editor with documentary filmmaker William Greaves. He also worked for several years at United Methodist Communication, a communication branch for the United Methodist Church. By 1989, Nelson wrote, produced, and directed his first documentary feature, Two Dollars and a Dream: The Story of Madame C.J. Walker, a story of the nation's first self-made African American female millionaire. This documentary later won the CINE Golden Eagle Award and was cited as the Best Production of the Decade by the Black Filmmaker Foundation.

Nelson began working as a television producer at PBS on the series Listening to America with Bill Moyers. Nelson went on to produce and direct the 1999 Emmy nominated documentary entitled The Black Press: Soldiers Without Swords, and the 2000 Black International Cinema Festival award winning documentary Marcus Garvey: Look for Me in the Whirlwind. Nelson and his wife, Marcia A. Smith, then formed the nonprofit documentary film production company Firelight Media. Firelight Media received funding from American Experience to produce the critically acclaimed 2003 documentary entitled The Murder of Emmett Till. The film won several awards including an Emmy for Best Directing-Nonfiction, the Sundance Film Festival 2003 Special Jury Prize, and the George Foster Peabody Award. In addition, the U.S. Justice Department has recently reopened the 1955 murder investigation of Emmett Till, citing the presence of new evidence exposed in Nelson’s documentary.

Nelson has taught film production and broadcast journalism at facilities in Rwanda and at Howard University in Washington, D.C. Nelson received fellowships at the American Film Institute, the New York Foundation for the Arts, and the 2002 MacArthur Foundation Genius Fellowship. In 2004, Nelson was honored with the Educational Video Center's Excellence in Community Service Award. In 2006, he completed the documentary entitled, Jonestown: The Life and Death of Peoples Temple.

Stanley Nelson was born on June 8, 1951 in New York City to A’Leliiia Ransom Nelson and Stanley Nelson, Sr. His maternal great grandfather was born into slavery in 1857. His grandfather was the general manager of the Madam C.J. Walker Manufacturing Company headquarters in Indianapolis, Indiana, where Nelson’s mother was born. In Washington, D.C., she worked at the Library of Congress. Nelson’s paternal grandfather hailed from Virginia, and held multiple jobs. Nelson’s father grew up in Washington, D.C., where he attended Howard University College of Dentistry and met Nelson’s mother. They relocated to Harlem and raised Nelson and his three siblings in a close-knit apartment complex. Nelson attended the integrated New Lincoln School, where he was inspired by his second grade teacher, Mr. Swan, and played basketball. His father worked long hours, so his mother reared him. Nelson, who attended six different colleges, describes his attitude toward higher education, as well as his father’s opinion of church.
Stanley Nelson attended six different colleges, including Beloit College in Beloit, Wisconsin; Morris Brown College in Atlanta, Georgia; and New York University and Hunter College in New York City. Due to their middle class background, Nelson’s parents supported his schooling expenses. During college, Nelson attended New York University’s summer film program, which inspired his interest in filmmaking. Upon graduating from City College of New York’s film school, Leonard Davis Center for the Performing Arts, he struggled to find a job at white film production companies. He contacted William Greaves, a black filmmaker. Greaves hired him and initiated Nelson’s career in documentary filmmaking, which Nelson compares to commercial filmmaking. He then joined United Methodist Communications, the United Methodist church’s communications branch, working on radio and film projects from 1978 to 1984. As the church became more conservative and less focused on social action, he left to pursue work overseas.

Stanley Nelson proposed the documentary film ‘Madam C.J. Walker: Two Dollars and a Dream’ to United Methodist Communications, his employer at the time, who allowed him to work on it independently. While the film was well received, garnering awards from the Black Filmmaker Foundation upon its release in the late 1980s, he also learned about budgeting. During the 1990s, Nelson produced documentaries while working on side projects for organizations like the Smithsonian Institution. His documentary, ‘The Black Press: Soldiers Without Swords,’ propelled his filmmaking career, compounding his previous success. Bill D. Moyers’ office recruited him to work for New York City’s WNET-TV, and he produced a feature on the war on drugs for ‘Listening to America.’ At this time, Nelson and his wife, Marcia Smith, founded Firelight Media, a documentary film company, through a Ford Foundation grant. For the PBS series ‘American Experience,’ they produced “The Murder of Emmett Till” and received a daytime Emmy Award.

Stanley Nelson was especially proud that his documentary film, ‘The Murder of Emmett Till’ contributed to the reopening of Till’s case in 2004. At this time, Nelson received a MacArthur Fellowship. His and his wife, Marcia Smith’s company, Firelight Media, produced ‘Beyond Brown: Pursuing the Promise’ and ‘A Place of Our Own,’ based on Nelson’s family and Martha’s Vineyard’s black community. He reflects upon the challenges associated with its filming, including the exposure of his middle class background. In the 2000s, Firelight Media produced ‘Sweet Honey in the Rock: Raise Your Voice,’ ‘Hip-Hop: Beyond Beats and Rhymes’ and ‘Jonestown: The Life and Death of Peoples Temple.’ Nelson describes his family’s move to San Francisco, California, and his ongoing teaching opportunities. In addition to filmmaking, he coached Little League baseball and enjoyed fishing. He reflects upon his career and future projects, his hopes and concerns for the African American community and the importance of doing one’s best.
