Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Entrepreneur David Holliman was born on September 13, 1929 in Denver, Colorado. Holliman became one of the first African Americans to gain long term employment with Continental Airlines where he helped to organize an African American maintenance workers organization. During his childhood, his father, Ernest William Holliman, was a Pullman porter and his mother, Adele Banks, died when he was two years old. His father moved the family from Pueblo, Colorado to Denver in the early 1940s where he attended Denver Public Schools receiving his diploma from East High School in 1948. That same year, he enlisted into the United States Coast Guard where he spent four years. In 1952, Holliman was discharged from active duty and spent another three years in the Army Reserves.

Holliman began his professional career as a small business owner. He owned a small janitorial business that offered cleaning services to office buildings in Denver. In 1966, he joined Continental Airlines in the maintenance department becoming one of the first African Americans to gain long term employment. There, he fought the biased policies that existed towards the African American workers and won his battle with a lawyer. Holliman later served as president of United Maintenance Incorporated and vice president of Queen City Services, Incorporated. In 1986, he retired from Continental Airlines.

Holliman has received mayoral appointments to the Denver City and County Board of Appeals and to the Mayor’s Black Advisory Committee. He also served as the president of the Barrett Elementary School’s Parent and Teacher Association. In 1990, he completed his studies at Regis College in Denver, Colorado where he received his B.S. degree in administration, business, and economics. Holliman has received the prestigious honor of being the Imperial Potentate of the Ancient Egyptian Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and Jurisdiction.

Holliman resided in Denver with his wife and family.

Holliman passed away on June 30, 2017.

David Holliman was born September 13, 1929 in Pueblo, Colorado to Adele Banks Holliman and Ernest Holliman, Jr. His mother died when he was two years old, so he was raised by his paternal grandparents, Rhoda Holliman and Ernest Holliman, Sr. His father lived nearby in Pueblo and worked as a Pullman porter. Holliman attended Pueblo’s Columbian Elementary School and helped his grandmother on their small farm. His family attended Bethlehem Baptist Church and celebrated traditional holidays. Holliman enjoyed listening to radio programs after school. When he was twelve years old, his father was promoted to porter brakeman, and Holliman moved with his father, Holliman’s stepmother Dorothy Holliman, and his sister, Jo Katherine Holliman-Page, to Denver, Colorado. There, he attended Morey Junior High School. Although Holliman did not yet aspire to own his own business, he knew of several black-owned businesses in Denver’s Five Point neighborhood, including a drugstore, restaurants and clubs like the Rossonian Hotel.

David Holliman compares his country home in Pueblo, Colorado and his life in the city of Denver. Like in Pueblo, Holliman had to sit in the balcony of movie theaters in Denver. He does not recall other explicit racial discrimination, although the communities were mostly discrimination, although the communities were mostly separated along racial lines. Holliman played basketball and track at the integrated East High School, and graduated in 1948. While Negro History Week was not mentioned in school, Holliman remembers his community’s celebrations. Holliman planned to attend Colorado State College of Education, but was drafted in 1948 to the U.S. Coast Guard, where he experienced little discrimination. Holliman supported the Civil Rights Movement primarily through his involvement with the Prince Hall Freemasonry organization, which he joined through his father. He met Reverend Benjamin Hooks and Rosa Parks at an NAACP event. Holliman also describes how he discovered his family history. At fifty years old, he received his degree from Denver’s Regis College.

David Holliman’s family moved to Pueblo, Colorado from Georgia, where his grandfather worked at Colorado Fuel and Iron. Upon his discharge from the U.S. Coast Guard, Holliman worked as a mail room clerk in the Denver Federal Center. He was then hired by Continental Airlines, where employees received a directive that they must be clean-shaven. Holliman and other black employees felt the order to be discriminatory and successfully had it reversed. Holliman witnessed favoritism in the airline business, though not based on race. In 1965, he retired from Continental and opened his own custodial business, United Maintenance Incorporated. Holliman was also active in the Ancient Egyptian Arabic Order Nobles Mystic Shrine order of the Masons, where he moved through the thirty-three degrees to achieve the highest rank. His activity in the Masons also supported the Civil Rights Movement. Holliman invited Ralph Abernathy to speak at East High School and supported Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr.’s nonviolent philosophy.

David Holliman was appointed by Mayor Wellington Webb to serve on the Denver City and County Board of Appeals from 1986. During Webb’s tenure, Holliman also served on the Mayor’s Black Advisory Committee with councilwoman Allegra “Happy” Haynes, and on the Colorado Black Round Table. Holliman and Reverend Leon Kelly met with local gang leaders to attempt to broker a truce, and brought them to a Masonic convention in Miami. They also partnered with a judge in Cleveland, Ohio to move gang members to his jurisdiction, giving them a chance at a new life in a new city. The Denver Police Department nominated Holliman an honorary captain in recognition of his work. When he was fifty years old, Holliman returned to college, where he shared his life experiences with his fellow students and professors. Holliman talks about his family and community in Denver. He also reflects upon his life, legacy and describes how he would like to be remembered.
