Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Lawyer Basil Alexander Paterson was born on April 27, 1926, in Harlem, New York. Paterson's mother Evangeline Rondon was a secretary for Marcus Garvey. Paterson received his high school diploma in 1942 from De Witt Clinton High School in the Bronx neighborhood of New York City. After working for six months, Paterson entered St. John's College from which he received his B.S. degree in biology in 1948, having spent two years in the Army. Paterson entered St. John's Law School and received his J.D. degree in 1951. Paterson then began his professional career as a lawyer in Harlem where he became law partners with Ivan A. Michael and former New York City Mayor David Dinkins. Paterson and Dinkins became heavily involved in Democratic politics in Harlem, along with former Manhattan Borough President Percy Sutton, and Congressman Charles Rangel.

Paterson was elected to the New York State Senate in 1965 where he remained until he won the primary to be the Democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor on a slate headed by Arthur Goldberg in 1970. The ticket lost to incumbent Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller. Paterson's son, David Paterson, was elected Lieutenant Governor in 2006; in 2008 he became Governor when Eliot Spitzer resigned. Paterson became the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Institute for Mediation and Conflict Resolution in 1972; he remained in that position until 1977. Paterson was the first elected African American Vice Chairman of the Democratic National Committee in 1972. In 1978, Mayor Ed Koch appointed Paterson to the position of Deputy Mayor of Labor Relations and Personnel. In 1979, Governor Hugh Carey appointed Paterson to the position of New York Secretary of State, making him the first African American to hold that rank. In 1989, Paterson became a commissioner of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, a position he held until 1995.

Paterson chaired the New York City Mayor's Judiciary Committee for four years, and the New York State Governor's Screening Panel for the Second Department for eight years. Paterson also served for ten years as a member of the Board of Editors of the New York Law Journal. In 2003, Paterson was appointed to the Commission to Promote Public Confidence in Judicial Elections. That same year, Paterson was elected Chairman of the KeySpan Foundation Board of Directors. Paterson served as Co-Chairman of the New York State Governor's Commission on Determinate Sentencing, and the New York State Commission on Powers of Local Government. Paterson received numerous awards including the Humanitarian Award from Coalition of Black Trade Unionists, and the St. John's University Medal of Excellence. Paterson practiced law at the law firm of Meyer, Suozzi, English and Klein where he served as co-chair of the firm's labor practice.

Video Oral History Interview with The Honorable Basil Paterson,
Section A2007_016_001_001, TRT: 0:30:09 2007/01/18

The Honorable Basil Paterson was born on April 27, 1926

in New York City to Evangeline Rondon Paterson and Leonard Paterson. His mother emigrated from Jamaica, while his father came to the United States from Carriacou, Grenada. Paterson's mother was Marcus Garvey's secretary, and his father was interested in politics. Paterson grew up in New York City's Harlem neighborhood, where he attended St. Thomas the Apostle Church. He recalls playing stickball in the street; his neighbor, boxer Sugar Ray Robinson; as well as police corruption, including discrimination against African American officers. Paterson attended James Fenimore Cooper Junior High School and DeWitt Clinton High School. Although he had never met a black teacher, he aspired to a career in education. At his first job after graduation, Paterson met George Fleary, a student who worked part time while attending The City College of New York. Fleary encouraged him to do the same, and Paterson enrolled to study biology at St. John's College.

Video Oral History Interview with The Honorable Basil Paterson, Section A2007_016_001_002, TRT: 0:29:08 2007/01/18

The Honorable Basil Paterson attended St. John's College, where he was one of four African American biology students. He planned to become a doctor, and the many African American doctors in his Harlem neighborhood served as role models. He talks about integration's impact on black professionalism and education. At seventeen years old, Paterson left college to join the U.S. Army, where he was stationed at Fort McClellan, Alabama, and experienced discrimination. After graduating from St. John's College School of Law, Paterson joined Levy and Harten, an African American law firm in Manhattan. Denied a raise in salary despite his excellent performance, he decided to found his own firm, and was joined by attorney Ivan A. Michael, who became his partner. Paterson explains the difference between the practice of law and the study of law. Later, as a New York State senator, Paterson defended labor rights, including the right to strike. He talks about the New York City transit strike of 2005, and the value of protest.

The Honorable Basil Paterson was the first in his family to attend college, and met Livingston Wingate, his mentor, through Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity. Paterson describes New York City's fraternities, which were less socially oriented than most. After law school, he joined the NAACP Legal Redress Committee, and formed the Young Democratic Independent Citizens Club. Later, Paterson moved his law firm to 116th Street and 8th Avenue in Harlem, and David N. Dinkins joined the firm. They became close allies, along with Charles B. Rangel and Percy Sutton, and the group became known as the Harlem Clubhouse. Paterson secured Adam Clayton Powell, Jr.'s support after Powell learned he shared a birthday with Paterson's son. In 1965, Paterson ran successfully for New York State Senate, his first political office. He describes the impact of the New York City transit strike of 2005, and talks about its leader, Roger Toussaint. Paterson also reflects upon the progress made by the African American community during his life.
