Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Cabinet appointee and president of Fisk University, Hazel Rollins O'Leary was born Hazel Reid on May 17, 1937, in Newport News, Virginia to Dr. Russell Edward Reid and Hazel Palleman. Raised by her stepmother Mattie Ross Reid, O'Leary attended the Urban League's camp in Atwater, Massachusetts every summer where she met Alma Brown and the Delany sisters. O'Leary attended Aberdeen Gardens School in Hampton, Virginia, Booker T. Washington School, John Marshall School and Huntington High School in Newport News, Virginia. O'Leary graduated from the High School of Fine and Performing Arts in Newark,

New Jersey in 1955. She then graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Fisk University in 1959, at the cusp of the Civil Rights Movement. Among her teachers were Vivian Henderson, Robert Hayden, and T.S. Courier. O'Leary went on to obtain her J.D. degree from Rutgers University Law School in 1966.

From 1967 to 1969, O'Leary handled organized crime cases while serving as assistant county prosecutor in Essex County, New Jersey. Later, she joined the accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand. During the administration of President Jimmy Carter, O'Leary acted as assistant administrator of the Federal Energy Commission, general counsel of the Community Services Administration, and an administrator for the Economic Regulatory Commission of the newly-created Department of Energy. In 1981, O'Leary and her husband formed O'Leary and Associates, 1989 to 1993, where she served as executive vice president of Northern States Power in Minnesota.

Nominated by President Bill Clinton in 1993, O'Leary became the seventh United States Secretary of Energy and the first African American woman to serve in that office. As Secretary, O'Leary changed the department's Office of Classification to the Office of Declassification, initiated an aggressive clean-up of surplus plutonium, created an Openness Advisory Panel, and encouraged the Clinton administration to end nuclear testing in the United States. O'Leary established the Samuel P. Massie Chair of Excellence Professorship in Environmental Disciplines which benefited nine historically black colleges and universities. In 1996, O'Leary resigned and joined Blaylock and Partners, becoming CEO in 2002. In 2004, O'Leary was named President of Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee.

O'Leary served on the boards of Africare, UAL Inc. (parent company of United Airlines), Morehouse College; Alchemix Corporation; AES Corporation; The Center for Democracy; ICF Kaiser; Scottish Re, Ltd.; Nashville Chamber Orchestra; the World Wildlife Fund; Nashville Alliance for Public Education; ITC Holdings, Inc.; and Nashville Business Community for the Arts. O'Leary also received numerous honors for her work. O'Leary was widowed in 1987 and she also has one son, attorney Carl G. Rollins III.

The Honorable Hazel O'Leary was born on May 17, 1937 in Newport News, Virginia to Hazel Pallemmon Reagan and Russell Reid. Her mother was born in San Antonio, Texas, where her maternal grandfather was a preacher, and her grandmother was a nurse. During World War II, O'Leary's mother joined the Women's Army Corps. O'Leary's father was born in Portsmouth, Virginia to parents educated at the Leonard School of Medicine and Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute. He was raised alongside seven brothers who all pursued professional fields like medicine, law and accounting. O'Leary's parents met at Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tennessee. They married and moved to Virginia, but divorced when O'Leary was four years old. O'Leary's father later married Mattie Ross Reid, a teacher who studied at Virginia State College for Negroes. Her stepmother's mother, Lula Clark, ran a charity that distributed donated clothing to the needy; and was married to the head of Newport News' numbers operation.

The Honorable Hazel O'Leary's step-grandmother, Lula Clark, was an entrepreneur who operated restaurants, concessions and gambling games around Tidewater, Virginia. O'Leary grew up in Portsmouth, Virginia, where she lived for a time in the household of her paternal grandfather, a doctor. She listened to radio shows like 'Stella Dallas' and 'Amos 'n' Andy,' and loved reading due to the influence of her paternal grandmother. She also attended Carver Memorial Presbyterian Church, the church of her stepmother, Mattie Ross Reid. During World War II, O'Leary experienced air raid drills, and saw German prisoners of war housed at Joint Base Langley-Eustis in Virginia. She began elementary school in Aberdeen Gardens, a closed community for African Americans in Hampton, Virginia. As an adolescent, O'Leary attended summer camp at Camp Atwater in North Brookfield, Massachusetts, where she met Alma Arrington Brown, Sarah Louise Delany and Annie Elizabeth Delany, who all became lauded educators.

The Honorable Hazel O'Leary began her education in the Aberdeen Gardens community of Hampton, Virginia. In third grade, she transferred to the all-black John Marshall Elementary School in Newport News, Virginia, where she was bullied due to her light skin. She began high school at Collis P. Huntington High School, and then transferred to the Arts High School in Newark, New Jersey as a sophomore. There, she played the French horn in the school band, which included future pop star Connie Francis. She also interacted with physically disabled peers for the first time. O'Leary witnessed her older sister's struggles at the integrated Cedar Crest College in Pennsylvania, and decided to enroll at the historically black Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee in 1955. There, O'Leary majored in history, and studied with professors like Leslie M. "Doc" Collins and Theodore S. Currier. The university had many regulations on female students' decorum, and O'Leary was once placed on social probation for driving a car.

The Honorable Hazel O'Leary entered Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee in 1955. During her freshman year, the university was led by its first African American president, Charles S. Johnson. In 1956, Johnson passed away, and was succeeded by Stephen J. Wright. Among O'Leary's professors were poet Robert Hayden, artist Aaron Douglas and Matthew Kennedy, the leader of the Fisk Jubilee Singers. O'Leary majored in history and economics, for which she was advised by Theodore S. Currier and Vivian Wilson Henderson. Her classmates included John Lewis, who was then a civil rights leader in Nashville; Marion Barry, who studied chemistry under Professor Samuel Massie; and Diane Nash. She recalls Nash's later life, including organizing the Freedom Rides; her marriage to Reverend James Bevel; and her honorary doctorate from Fisk University in 2007. In 2004, O'Leary returned to Fisk University as its president, and led a faculty that included historian Reavis L. Mitchell, Jr. and poet Nikki Giovanni.
