Detailed Description of the Collection
Robert Stevenson begins the interview by describing his childhood. He was raised in his grandmother’s house in Watts, California. He provides details about his family tree. His father, Willis Roddie Stevenson, was born in Louisville, Kentucky and joined The United States Navy at age seventeen. His mother, Christine Stevenson, was born in Louisville, Kentucky, and moved to Los Angeles, California at the age of nineteen. Christine married Willis when she was fifteen years old; from this union there were twelve children, seven girls and five boys, and Robert is the oldest. Stevenson went to school with members of The Whispers, Johnny Ray Peters and Brenda Holiday.

Robert Stevenson continues to share information about his father’s side of the family. He has never met his paternal grandparents, or seen any photographs of them. Stevenson recalls his elementary school years at Douglas Elementary School and Corpus Christi Elementary School. He discusses his high school career at Wendell Phillips High School. He worked in a drum manufacturing plant with his father. While working at the plant he was mentored by his father’s boss. His family left public housing because his father’s income disqualified them. Stevenson’s mother died at the age of thirty-three, right after the family bought their first house in Los Angeles, California. His father abandoned the family which caused Stevenson to lose respect for his father. Stevenson begins to work for Douglas Enterprises while he attended beauty school. Shortly after opening his own beauty shop, he was hired by Universal Studios as a hairdresser.

Robert Stevenson describes the experience of living in the projects of Watts, California. He remembers this time fondly; he and the other neighborhood children would go to the beach, The Long Beach Pike, and the watchtowers. Stevenson describes his father as a functioning alcoholic. Due to Willis Stevenson’s alcoholism, Stevenson began to dislike his father. His father abandoned the family after his mother suddenly died at the age of thirty-three. Stevenson was drafted into The United States Army; he served for two years and some of this time was spent overseas. While in The United States Army, Stevenson experienced racism as a serviceman. He believes the draft should be reinstated. Stevenson provides his philosophies on race and culture. One of his Robert Stevenson discusses his career choices. He worked as a cook at Los Angeles International Airport, Blue Chip Stamps, Modene Manufacturers, and the Los Angeles Board of Education until he was drafted into the army. He describes opening up his first beauty salon on Crenshaw Blvd. in Los Angeles, California. Stevenson married Gwendolyn Lett in 1965 in Los Angeles, California. He worked in Hollywood, California for three years as an apprentice. The first show Stevenson was a hairstylist on was, “McMillan and Wife,” and then he styled on “Ironside”. He worked at Universal Studios as a hairstylist from 1969-1977, the first African American male studio hairstylist in Hollywood in 1969, and also the first African American in their union. Some of his other professional engagements include “Kojak” and “The Lucille Ball Show.” Stevenson describes the studio hairstylist profession. He shares who some of his professional and personal mentors are.

Robert Stevenson discusses how to survive in the Hollywood, California motion picture and television industry. Maintaining a small ego is the key to success in Hollywood. The rumor of Hollywood being glamorous is false; there is a lot of hard work involved. Stevenson shares his opinion of unionized labor. Stevenson and Gwendolyn divorced in 1974. Before they divorced, they had one child, Kendra Stevenson-Ruffin. He met his second wife, Rosalind Woodruff, on the set of the television show “Emergency”. He married Rosalind in 1977, from this union they had one son named Teron. Rosalind was one of the first African American publicists in Hollywood, California. Stevenson shares his mentoring principles. He compares his experiences in Africa to race relations in the United States.
Robert Stevenson shares his memories of working with Richard Pryor. Having last worked with Pryor on "Harlem Nights," Stevenson describes Pryor as a very kind and generous man. He has worked with some of the biggest names in film, including Robin Harris, Della Reese, Redd Fox and Angela Bassett; Stevenson wants to be remembered as a man that helped others and did a wonderful job hairstyling. He shares some of his unique ways to style lace front wigs. Stevenson is the recipient of three Emmy nominations winning one in 1984 for hairstyling in “The Jesse Owens Story.” He retired from hairstyling in 2008. Some of his current ventures include helping the hairstylist unions and volunteering with women cancer patients.
