Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Professor Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham was born on June 4, 1945 in Washington, D.C. to Albert Neal Dow Brooks, the secretary-treasurer for the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History and editor of the organization's Negro History Bulletin, and Alma Elaine Campbell, a high school history teacher who later served as the supervisor for history in the Washington, D.C. public school system. Higginbotham received her B.A. degree in history from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee in 1969, her M.A. degree in history from Howard University in 1974, and her Ph.D. degree in history from the University of Rochester in 1984.

After receiving her B.A. degree, Higginbotham taught U.S. history and served as an eighth grade counselor at Francis Parkman Jr. High School in Milwaukee, Wisconsin for two years. She then moved to Washington, D.C., where she taught U.S. history and social studies at Woodrow Wilson High School from 1971 to 1974. After working as a manuscript research associate at the Moorland-Spangarn Research Center at Howard University from 1974 to 1975, Higginbotham was hired as a professor of history at several institutions, including Dartmouth College, the University of Maryland, and the University of Pennsylvania. Higginbotham joined the faculty at Harvard University in 1993 as a professor of Afro-American studies and African American religious history. In 1998, she was named the Victor S. Thomas Professor of History and African American Studies at Harvard University. Higginbotham was appointed chair of Harvard's African American Studies Department in 2006 and served in that position until 2013. In 2008, she served as acting director of Harvard's W. E. B. Du Bois Institute for African and African American Research. Higginbotham was appointed the inaugural John Hope Franklin Professor of American Legal History at Duke University Law School in 2010. She then was named the national president of ASALH in 2016 and chair of the Department of History at Harvard University in 2018, holding both positions until 2021.

Higginbotham is the author of Righteous Discontent: The Women's Movement in the Black Baptist Church, 1880-1920 (1993). She also updated and revised the late John Hope Franklin's African American history survey From Slavery to Freedom: A History of African Americans (2010). Higginbotham served as editor-in-chief of The Harvard Guide to African-American History (2001) and was co-editor, with Henry Louis Gates, Jr., of the expanded, twelve-volume The African American National Biography (2012).

The Association for the Study of African American Life and History (ASALH) honored Higginbotham with the Carter G. Woodson Scholars Medallion in 2008 and the Living Legacy Award in 2012. Higginbotham received an honorary doctorate from Howard University in 2011, the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee in 2014, and Duke University in 2021. In 2014, she received the National Humanities Medal.

Higginbotham lives in Auburndale, Massachusetts.

Video Oral History Interview with Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham, Section A2013_007_001_001, TRT: 1:29:50 ?

Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham was born on June 4, 1945 in Washington, D.C. to Elaine Campbell Wells and Albert N.D. Brooks. Her paternal great-grandfather, Albert Royal Brooks, was born into slavery in Richmond, Virginia. He bought his wife's freedom in 1862, but their daughter was sold to a family in Tennessee before emancipation. Higginbotham's paternal grandmother was raised by her adoptive father, James Henry Holmes, who pastored Richmond's First African Baptist Church. She married a minister in Washington, D.C., where Higginbotham's father was born in 1897. Her maternal grandparents migrated from Jamaica to New York City's Harlem neighborhood, where her mother grew up on Edgecombe Avenue in the 1920s. Her grandmother worked in the city's Garment District. Higginbotham's mother studied history under Rayford W. Logan at Howard University in Washington, D.C., and went on to teach at Shaw Junior High School and Paul Laurence Dunbar High School. She later became a curriculum supervisor.

Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham's paternal great-grandfather, Albert Royal Brooks, and grandfather, Walter Henderson Brooks, were enslaved in Richmond, Virginia. After they were freed by the Union Army in 1865, her great-grandfather served on the petit jury for the trial of Confederate President Jefferson Davis; and her great-grandmother, Lucy Goode Brooks, founded the Friends' Asylum for Colored Orphans. Higginbotham's grandfather graduated from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, and worked as a lawyer before becoming a minister at Richmond's Second African Baptist Church. From 1882, he pastored the Nineteenth Street Baptist Church in Washington, D.C., where the National Association of Colored Women's Clubs was founded and educator Nannie Helen Burroughs was a congregant. He also published a book of poetry, 'The Pastor's Voice,' which included an introduction by historian Carter G. Woodson. Brooks Higginbotham also talks about her paternal relatives, including Brigadier General Elmer T. Brooks.

Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham's paternal grandfather, Walter Henderson Brooks, was the minister of the Nineteenth Street Baptist Church in Washington, D.C. The congregation included educator Nora Drew Gregory and attorney Wiley Branton. Higginbotham's father, Albert N.D. Brooks, graduated from M Street High School and enrolled in Dartmouth College in Hanover, New Hampshire. He was drafted into the U.S. Army during World War I, and later earned a bachelor's degree from Howard University and a master's degree from New York University. He became a public school teacher, and met Higginbotham's mother, who was twenty-four years his junior, while teaching at Shaw Junior High School. Higginbotham's father was also the editor of the Negro History Bulletin, and often brought her to Carter G. Woodson's home for meetings of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History. Higginbotham began her education at Slowe Elementary School in Washington, D.C. She had one older sister, Elaine Brooks.

Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham spent her early childhood years in the Brookland neighborhood of Washington, D.C. She attended Slowe Elementary School, which was named for Lucy Diggs Slowe, one of the founders of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. After moving with her family to Northwest Washington, D.C., Higginbotham continued her education at MacFarland Junior High School. There, she tutored a classmate in Latin, and developed an interest in teaching. After entering Theodore Roosevelt Senior High School, she studied history and literature under Helen M. Blackburn. Around this time, Higginbotham's father, Albert N.D. Brooks, served as the editor of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History's Negro History Bulletin, and published one of her poems. Higginbotham frequently traveled with her family to destinations like Yosemite National Park. She talks about her early experiences of segregation, and recalls being barred from Glen Echo Park, an amusement park in Glen Echo, Maryland.
