Video Oral History Interview with B Michael, Section A2014_106_001_001, TRT: 1:29:16 2014/05/10

B Michael was born on March 31, 1957 in Connecticut. His maternal family lived in Connecticut for three generations, while his father moved to Connecticut from Florida with his family. Michael’s maternal grandfather was Cape Verdean, and had relatives in New Bedford, Massachusetts. Michael and his four brothers were raised by his parents in West Haven, Connecticut, where his paternal grandparents lived nearby. From an early age, Michael had an interest in fashion and kept a millinery sketchbook. He shared magazines with his mother and grandmother, and enjoyed watching ‘I Love Lucy.’

Michael attended May V. Carrigan Intermediate School and Harry M. Bailey Junior High School in West Haven. When he was thirteen years old, his family moved to Durham, Connecticut, where he was active in the choir and theater at Coginchaug Regional High School. During Michael’s senior year, his paternal grandfather died, and he returned to West Haven to support his grandmother. He graduated from West Haven High School.

B Michael was thirteen years old when he began accompanying his paternal grandmother to Kramer’s, a high end clothier in New Haven, Connecticut. There, his grandmother emphasized the value of quality garments and timeless style. Upon graduating from high school in the mid-1970s, Michael wanted to move to New York City, but his guidance counselors suggested that he attend the University of Connecticut. After a brief enrollment, he returned to West Haven, Connecticut to focus on his interest in fashion. Encouraged by his grandmother’s friends, Michael contacted milliner Ann Albrizio with his designs, and was invited to study at the Fashion Institute of Technology while working for her company. In the mid-1980s, costume designer Nolan Miller saw Michael’s work at the Lonette Millinery Company store in Los Angeles, California, and recruited him to make the hats for the ‘Dynasty’ television show. Michael’s hats went on to be featured at the Ebony Fashion Fair.

B Michael’s millinery was featured in Ebony magazine, and he developed a close relationship with Eunice Johnson during his early career. At the time, he sold millinery to independent stores throughout the country, and designed for the popular soap opera, ‘Dynasty.’ In 1987, Michael was hired as the creative director of the Canadian Hat Company. In 1988, he returned to New York City to work for the Aldo Hat Corporation, which distributed millinery to high end retailers like Saks Fifth Avenue, Nordstrom and Bonwit Teller and Company. Michael also traveled to Paris, France to create couture millinery for Balmain under the direction of Oscar de la Renta. As his interests expanded, he approached the Aldo Hat Corporation about creating a clothing line. They offered to form a three-way partnership, which Michael rejected at the advice of his manager, Audrey Potts. Michael joined the Council of Fashion Designers of America in 1998. The next year, he left the Aldo Hat Corporation to launch his own brand.

B Michael met Eleanor Lambert through the Council of Fashion Designers of America. She recruited fashion editors to attend the launch of b michael AMERICA, and introduced Michael to designer John Anthony and fashion journalist Elsa Klensch. They assisted with Michael’s first New York Fashion Week show, and became supporters of his projects. For the initial launch of b michael AMERICA, Michael created a couture collection of twenty-five garments. Although his first New York Fashion Week show received strong reviews from fashion editors, his second collection was burdened by his staff’s conflicting visions. Nevertheless, the success of the first collection carried the company, and Michael learned to focus on his clean, architectural aesthetic. As the business grew, Michael attracted a diverse clientele, and maintained his relationships with early supporters from Connecticut and prominent women of color. He dressed celebrities like Cicely Tyson, with whom he formed a close relationship.

B Michael founded b michael AMERICA in 1999, and initially focused on couture garments. His first collection garnered widespread critical acclaim, and Michael rose to prominence in the fashion world. In 2002, Michael agreed to create a bridge collection for Saks Fifth Avenue, which he hoped would provide financial stability for the b michael AMERICA Couture line. However, Michael conflicted with his manufacturing partners, and the line ended after a few years. During this time, he continued to design and show couture collections. In 2007, Michael met entrepreneur Mark-Anthony Edwards in an elevator after a cocktail party. They developed a romantic partnership, and Michael asked Edwards to become the CEO of b michael AMERICA. With his guidance, Michael redesigned the corporate structure and developed a new business plan for the company. Inspired by Ralph Lauren’s model, Michael transitioned the company into a vertically integrated lifestyle brand, and secured a partnership with Macy’s, Inc.

B Michael and Mark-Anthony Edwards began implementing the new business plan for b michael AMERICA in 2009. Their model emphasized a sustainable financial plan, and used manufacturers in the Garment District of New York City. They secured sponsorships for their New York Fashion Week shows, and began showing under the Mercedes-Benz umbrella to attract more press. Michael and Edwards also approached Macy’s, Inc. with a plan to develop lifestyle lines and the b michael AMERICA RED collection, and hired brand ambassadors to manage their relationship with the company’s retail stores. The RED collection launch was hosted by philanthropist Kathryn Chennault. In 2012, Michael was invited by Debra Martin Chase to help design Whitney Houston’s wardrobe for the film ‘Sparkle.’ His clothing was also worn by television news anchor Brenda Wood. At this point in the interview, Michael reflects upon the history of black fashion design, and talks about the industry’s future.

B Michael befriended Lena Horne after designing a hat for her in 1990. They were introduced by Carol Craig, whom Michael met at Patrick Kelly’s funeral. Following the death of Ebony founder Eunice Johnson in 2010, Michael’s garments were featured in exhibits about her life and work at the Chicago History Museum and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City. Additionally, one of his couture gowns was included in the exhibit on Nancy Wilson at the National Museum of American History in Washington, D.C. Michael was active with the Multicultural Audience Development Initiative of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, where he served on the planning committee for a tribute to black designer Arthur McGee. At this point in the interview, Michael reflects upon his career, and shares his thoughts about racial stereotypes in the fashion industry. He describes his hopes and concerns for the African American fashion community, and reflects upon his life and relationship with Mark-Anthony Edwards.
