Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Radio DJ Bobby Bennett was born on July 20, 1943 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. From a young age, Bennett knew that he wanted to be a radio DJ. Following high school, he enrolled in a broadcasting school in Pittsburgh.

In 1967, Bennett worked as a news reporter for Pittsburgh's WAMO-AM and WZUM radio stations. One year later, in 1968, he moved to WOL-AM in Washington, D.C., where he became known to radio fans as “The Mighty Burner” and hosted a show until 1980. Bennett then hosted a sports talk show on WTOP in the early 1980s, and served as program director for WHUR-FM from 1987 to 1992. After his time at WHUR, Bennett was hired as a morning talk show host at WXTR; and, in 1997, he became the host of an R&B radio show on WPFW-FM. In 2000, Bennett created the “Soul Street” channel for XM Satellite Radio, and served as its program director until 2010. During his career, he also was employed as a record executive and as a voice over narrator.

Bennett was the co-author of The Ultimate Soul Music Trivia Book: 501 Questions and Answers About Motown, Rhythm & Blues, and More, which was published in 1997. In 1988, Bennett was presented with several awards from Washington, D.C., Maryland and Pennsylvania. In 1972, he was named Billboard magazine’s R&B Disc Jockey of the Year, and, in 1973, was recognized as Disc Jockey of the Year by the Gavin Report.

Bennett passed away on September 8, 2015 at age 72.

Video Oral History Interview with Bobby Bennett, Section
Bobby Bennett was born on July 20, 1943 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania to Flavia Sloan Payne and Marshall Payne, Jr. Bennett’s maternal grandfather, Mark Sloan, Sr. migrated from the heavily segregated Greenville, South Carolina to Pittsburgh, where he became the first African American mail carrier in the State of Pennsylvania. Bennett’s Native American maternal grandmother, Marguerite Tapsico Sloan, worked as a cook for Lorenz Iversen, who was the president of Mesta Machine Company. Bennett’s paternal grandfather, Marshall Payne, Sr., was employed at the United States Steel Corporation. His paternal grandmother, Lila Lewis Payne, was also Native American, and wore her traditional attire each year on the Fourth of July. Bennett’s parents met at a dance, and married just before his father was drafted into the U.S. military during World War II. After the war, his father enlisted in the newly formed U.S. Air Force while his mother worked as a dietary supervisor at Montefiore Hospital.

Bobby Bennett’s father, Marshall Payne, Jr. left the U.S. military in 1954 after serving in the Korean War. Bennett was raised in a housing project in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he began his education at Dilworth Elementary School. As a child, Bennett was a successful baseball player, and was chosen to participate in the semifinals of the Little League Baseball World Series in Hagerstown, Maryland. There, he experienced segregation for the first time when he forced to stay in Washington, D.C. forty miles away. While at Gladstone High School, Bennett was encouraged by his history teacher Ted Soens to read Time magazine, and learn about current world events. During this time, he also worked at a local clothing store. When Bennett vocalized his interest in becoming a disc jockey, the majority of his family was not supportive with the exception of his mother, Flavia Sloan Payne. Additionally, Bennett describes his brothers and their careers, and remembers his maternal great uncle Herbert Lewis.
Bobby Bennett considered playing for the St. Louis Cardinals’ D league team as a teenager; but when he was unable to hit a curveball during try outs, he decided not to pursue professional baseball any further. Nevertheless, Bennett went on to be featured in the Pittsburgh Courier as student athlete of the week in basketball. He attended Gladstone High School until his family moved to the Homestead neighborhood of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he enrolled at Westinghouse High School. Inspired by local disc jockeys like Sir Walter, Bill Powell, Harold Brown and Porky Chedwick, Bennett decided to pursue his interests in radio, initially running errands for radio station managers. Upon graduating, he accepted an internship at Western Electric Company, where he met WAMO Radio disc jockey Al Germany, who invited him onto his show. Bennett was then hired for a news segment, and promoted to a radio host position six months later. Additionally, he talks about the music industry in Pittsburgh.

Bobby Bennett worked at WAMO Radio in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania before moving to its competitor WZUM Radio, where he became known for playing popular music as well as lesser known songs. In 1969, Bennett moved to Washington, D.C., where he was offered a position at WOL Radio. At that point, he was drafted into the Vietnam War, but was ultimately deferred for medical reasons. After returning to the station, Bennett became an overnight radio host before eventually moving to an afternoon time slot. During this time, he also completed coursework at a local broadcasting school. Bennett received his famed nickname The Mighty Burner from fellow disc jockey Bob “Nighthawk” Terry. At this point in the interview, Bennett talks about the accuracies and inaccuracies of the James Brown biopic ‘Get on Up’ as well as fictionalized portrayals of the 1960s R&B era like ‘Five Heartbeats’ and ‘Dreamgirls.’ He also talks about radio talk show host Petey Greene and the influence disc Bobby Bennett became an afternoon radio host at WOL Radio in Washington, D.C. in 1969. In the beginning of his career, he met notable musicians and groups, like Duke Fakir of the Four Tops, The Jackson 5 and Kool and the Gang. During his twelve year tenure at WOL Radio, Bennett went on to meet and befriend a variety of artists including Johnnie Taylor, Al Green, Barry White, and Marilyn McCoo and Bill Davis, Jr. of The 5th Dimension. At this point in the interview, Bennett recalls hosting an event, where Sly Stone was the headliner. Stone arrived late to the venue and made insulting statements toward Bennett, which were overheard and later published in an article. In support of Bennett, WOL Radio and other local deejays stopped playing music by Sly and the Family Stone, but eventually resumed after they were approached by promoters from Stone’s record label, Capitol Records. In addition, Bennett describes changes in the radio industry and his efforts to avoid payola corruption.

Bobby Bennett became the program director of WHUR Radio in Washington, D.C. in 1987. He also worked as an afternoon anchor with the likes of disc jockey Dyana Williams, freelance photographer David “Oggi” Ogburn and Melvin Lindsey, who pioneered the Quiet Storm R&B format. In the late 1960s, Bennett befriended musician Chuck Brown of Chuck Brown and the Soul Searchers, and began working with the band The Young Senators. After leaving WHUR Radio, he spent two years in the record promotion department at Capitol Records in New York City. In 1992, Bennett returned to the radio industry as a host at WXTR Radio in Washington, D.C. During this time, he also organized cruise concerts on the Potomac River. Bennett briefly worked at WPFW Radio, where he was given full control of his format and song choices. In 2000, he was approached by XM Satellite Radio, Inc. to create their ‘Soul Street’ channel and function as its program director. Additionally, Bennett talks about go-go music in Washington, D.C.
