Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Corporate executive Carol Fulp was born on January 28, 1952 in Queens, New York to Paris Nicholson, Jr. and Miriam Nicholson, the first African American female manager at Swissair Airlines. Fulp graduated from Springfield Gardens High School in Queens, New York in 1970. She initially studied at Boston University, but earned her B.S. degree in liberal arts from the State University of New York at Albany in 1974.

Fulp first worked as a customer service representative at the Gillette Company in Boston, Massachusetts. Over the next decade, she was promoted to corporate employee relations manager at Gillette. In 1987, Fulp transitioned to the television industry as a human resource manager at WCVB, Boston’s ABC-TV affiliate, where she was eventually promoted to director of community programming and human resources. In 1998, Fulp left WCVB to become the assistant vice president of community relations at John Hancock Financial Services. She was promoted to vice president of community relations in 2002, and senior vice president of corporate responsibility and brand initiatives in 2009. In 2010, Fulp was selected by President Barack Obama as a representative of the United States to the 65th Session of the United Nations General Assembly. In 2012, Fulp left John Hancock to become president and CEO of The Partnership, Inc., a leadership development organization for executives and professionals of color. She was appointed to the board of trustees of the University of the Virgin Islands by U.S. Virgin Islands Governor John de Jongh, and the board of trustees of Boston Public Library as well as the City of Boston Compensation Advisory Board by Boston Mayor Marty Walsh. Appointed by Governor Deval L. Patrick, Fulp served for five years on the Massachusetts Convention Center Authority Board. She was also appointed to the Massachusetts State Treasurer Deborah Goldberg’s Advisory Committee on Wage Equality, and served on the Harvard Kennedy School Women’s Leadership board. Fulp joined the Boston University Board of Trustees in 2015.

Fulp received numerous awards, including the Eleanor Roosevelt Award and the Patriot’s Award as well as the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce 2000 Pinnacle Award and 2017 Distinguished Bostonian Award. In 2003, Fulp was named one of the “50 Most Powerful Women In Boston” by Boston Magazine. Fulp was a founding co-chair of the Massachusetts Conference for Women in 2005, the largest women’s leadership conference in the country with 10,000 attendees. Fulp was the recipient of an honorary doctorate of law from New England Law Boston and an honorary doctorate from Salem State University.

Fulp is married to bank executive C. Bernard Fulp.

Carol Fulp was born on January 28, 1952 in Queens, New York to Miriam Riley Nicholson and Paris Nicholson, Jr. Her maternal grandparents, Viola Hattersen Riley and MacDonald Riley, were born on St. Croix in the U.S. Virgin Islands, and moved to Queens, where her grandfather worked at the post office. Fulp’s paternal grandparents, Osee Lockhart Nicholson and Paris Nicholson, Sr., were also from the U.S. Virgin Islands. After marrying in St. Thomas, they moved to Queens, as Fulp’s great-grandfather, Afred Lockhart, Sr., disapproved of their relationship. Fulp was raised in Queens’ Jamaica neighborhood, where she attended P.S. 120. She spent the summers with her relatives in the U.S. Virgin Islands. When she was twelve year old, her family moved to Rochdale Village, a predominantly Jewish community in Queens. She went on to attend the International Summer Camp Montana in Crans-Montana, Switzerland. There, she learned to speak French, which angered her white peers at J.H.S. 8.

Carol Fulp developed petit mal epilepsy at the age of seven years old, and continued to have seizures until her late twenties. She began acting in school plays at P.S. 140 in Queens, New York. She took piano lessons from her paternal grandmother, Osee Lockhart Nicholson, and performed at J.H.S. 8. She went on to develop an interest in dance, and formed the Royal Eight girls club at Springfield Gardens High School. Fulp stopped attending the International Summer Camp Montana in 1968, when her father, Paris Nicholson, Jr., passed away. From that time, she spent the summers visiting her paternal grandparents and brother, Paris Nicholson III, who had moved to the U.S. Virgin Islands. Later, Fulp’s mother remarried to her deceased husband’s half-brother, Liston Nicholson. Fulp studied liberal arts at Boston University in Massachusetts, but struggled to cope with the side effects of her epilepsy medication. She received her bachelor’s degree in 1984 from the University of the State of New York at Albany.

Carol Fulp was introduced to politics by her stepfather, Liston Nicholson, who ran for the New York City Council. Fulp later married Bruce Bolling, who was the first black president of the Boston City Council. Her father-in-law, Royal L. Bolling, and brother-in-law, Royal Bolling, Jr., both served in the Massachusetts state legislature. Fulp and Bolling later divorced. In 1987, Fulp joined the staff of Boston’s WCVB-TV station. She combined their human resources (HR) and community relations departments, and earned the title of vice president. She represented the station on the board of The Ad Club, where she met a board member from John Hancock Financial Services Inc. Through that contact, Fulp was recruited to the firm as the second vice president of HR, and created the Summer of Opportunity and Kenya Project youth programs. She met her second husband, C. Bernard Fulp, in 2000 at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. Fulp also organized Boston Women Build in the Bayou after Hurricane Katrina.
