Series I: Original Interview Footage

Video Oral History Interview with Merline Pitre, Section A2016_116_001_001, TRT: 1:29:45 2016/11/28

Merline Pitre was born on April 10, 1943 in Plaisance, Louisiana to Florence White Pitre and Robert Pitre. Her maternal grandmother, Rosella Sam White, grew up in the rural community of Plaisance, where her family owned property. Pitre’s maternal grandfather, Vallery White, helped build the Plaisance School in Opelousas, Louisiana, which was financed in part by the Julius Rosenwald Fund. Both of Pitre’s parents were raised in Plaisance, where they worked as sharecroppers. Her father had five children by his first wife, who died at a young age. He then married Pitre’s mother, with whom he had three children, including Pitre’s sister and brother, Sandra Pitre Taylor and Gregory Pitre. Pitre began her education at the Plaisance School, where she studied African American history under Josie Hammond Vann. From the age of seven years old, Pitre missed part of the school year...
Merline Pitre was educated through eighth grade at the Plaisance School in Opelousas, Louisiana. In 1948, the school became Plaisance High School, where Pitre graduated as valedictorian in 1962. She received a National Defense Student Loan to attend Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, where she majored in French with a minor in social studies. During this time, the university president, Felton Grandison Clark, was compelled by the State of Louisiana to expel eighteen student demonstrators. Pitre went on to earn a master’s degree in French from Atlanta University in Atlanta, Georgia. While there, she participated in the Institute of the Black World. Upon graduating in 1967, she was hired to teach French at Saint Augustine’s College in Raleigh, North Carolina. Then, Pitre completed a Ph.D. degree in history at Temple University in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Under her advisor Lawrence D. Reddick, she wrote her dissertation on the loyalty of Frederick Douglass to the Republican Party.

Merline Pitre joined the faculty of the history department at Texas Southern University (TSU) in Houston, Texas in 1976. Around this time, she wrote her first book, ‘Through Many Dangers, Toils and Snares: Black Leadership in Texas, 1868-1898,’ in response to the absence of scholarship on black Texan politicians during Reconstruction. In addition to redistricting, she found that many black legislators advocated for the founding of schools in Texas. In 1980, Pitre led a trip to Haiti and the Dominican Republic on behalf of the Texas Historically Black Colleges and Universities. Her article, ‘Frederick Douglass and the Annexation of Santo Domingo,’ was then published in The Journal of the Negro History. In 1985, Pitre wrote ‘In Struggle Against Jim Crow: Lulu B. White and the NAACP, 1900-1957,’ which studied the activism of Lulu B. White. Pitre went on to serve as the college dean at TSU, where she developed the women’s studies program and organized a teacher workshop on the history of Jim Crow.

Merline Pitre was a member of the history department faculty of Texas Southern University in Houston, Texas for over thirty-five years. From 1990 to 1994, she served as dean of the university’s College of Liberal Arts and Behavioral Sciences. Around this time, she and Bruce A. Glasrud edited the essay collection ‘Black Women in Texas History,’ which won a Liz Carpenter Award. Pitre was also active in organizations like the American Historical Association and the Organization of American Historians, where she served as president in 2007. In 2011, she helped develop the digital Handbook of African American Texas for the Texas State Historical Association. At this point in the interview, Pitre talks about the significance of the U.S. Supreme Court decision of Sweatt v. Painter in 1950 for subsequent educational equality cases, like Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka. In 2013, Pitre and Bruce A. Glasrud co-edited the collection ‘Southern Black Women in the Modern Civil Rights Movement.’

Video Oral History Interview with Merline Pitre, Section A2016_116_001_005, TRT: 5:27:47 2016/11/28

Merline Pitre was the dean of the Texas Southern University (TSU) College of Liberal Arts and Behavioral Sciences in Houston, Texas from 1990 to 1994. During this time, her publications included ‘Black Houstonians and the Separate but Equal Doctrine’ and ‘Different Strokes for Different Folks: African Americans and Source Material.’ At TSU, she hosted lectures and conferences on topics like The Fourteenth Amendment and Black Quest for Equality, and Salvaging the Self: Black Southerners’ Response to Jim Crow. She received numerous awards for her scholarship, including the Lorraine A. Williams Leadership Award from the Association of Black Women Historians. She also served on the peer review board of the Journal of American History. Pitre’s personal memoir was included in Deborah Gray White’s edited volume, ‘Telling Histories: Black Women Historians in the Ivory Tower.’ At this point in the interview, she talks about the history of Texas Southern University, which was the topic of her forthcoming book.

Merline Pitre grew up in the rural black community of Plaisance, Louisiana. Like Pitre, many of the children from the neighborhood grew up to become educators, including biology professor O’Neil Ray Collins. At the time of the interview, Pitre intended to compile a history of African American life in St. Landry Parish, Louisiana. She also shares her account of the police riot that occurred on the campus of Texas Southern University in 1967, which resulted in the arrest of hundreds of black students. Pitre reflects upon her life and legacy, as well as the importance of The HistoryMakers project. She shares her advice to students, and concludes the interview by narrating her photographs.
