Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Music composer and arranger Daryl Waters was born in Cleveland, Ohio. From the age of eight years old, Waters studied music at the Cleveland Music School Settlement. While attending Shaw High School in East Cleveland, he played piano and served as a conductor for Karamu Theater and The Singing Angels, as well as conducting at a summer music theatre program and performing with his own band. Upon graduation, Waters enrolled at Livingstone College in Salisbury, North Carolina, where he obtained his B.A. degree in music with a specialization in piano performance in 1978.

Waters returned to Cleveland after graduation, playing various jobs around town, before moving to New York in 1981, where he began working as a nightclub pianist, arranger and conductor. In 1983, Waters became the music director for the European tour of Ain't Misbehavin', the acclaimed musical revue of the Harlem Renaissance and tribute to Fats Waller. In 1985, Waters landed his first job on Broadway as the associate conductor of the Broadway musical, Leader of the Pack, directed by Michael Peters who choreographed Michael Jackson's "Thriller" and "Beat It" music videos. In 1992, Waters was the associate conductor for George C. Wolfe's Jelly's Last Jam, joining Wolfe again in 1996 as a co-composer of Bring in 'Da Noise, Bring in 'Da Funk, which garnered him his first Tony and Grammy nominations. In 1997, Waters supervised and orchestrated Street Corner Symphony, a revue of 1960s and 1970s soul music.

Waters worked Off-Broadway as the music director for George C. Wolfe's The Colored Museum (1986), the composer for In Real Life (2001), orchestrator for Kirsten Childs' Miracle Brothers (2005), music director of The Seven (2006) (a hip-hop adaptation of Aeschylus' Seven Against Thebes), composer for Blue Door (2006), supervisor/arranger for the highly-acclaimed musical celebration A Civil War Christmas (2008) by Pulitzer winner Paula Vogel, and orchestrator for Childs' Bella (2017).

In 2010, Waters earned rave reviews for his orchestration of Memphis: A New Musical, receiving both Tony and Drama Desk Awards. In 2013, he was the conductor for After Midnight, under the music direction of Wynton Marsalis, with various stars including Fantasia, Toni Braxton and Kenneth Edmonds, and Patti LaBelle. He arranged, orchestrated and supervised music for Holler If Ya Hear Me (2014), Shuffle Along (2016) with director George C. Wolfe (for which he also wrote new material), and The Cher Show (2018).

In addition to his theatrical accomplishments, Waters became Eartha Kitt's music director in 1986, performing concerts with her on six continents over twenty-two years. He also conducted and arranged for many other stars, including Leslie Uggams, Sammy Davis Jr., Gregory Hines, Cab Calloway, Nell Carter, Patti Austin and Jennifer Holliday.

Waters is a member of the Dramatists Guild of America and the American Federation of Musicians.

Daryl Waters was born on May 12, 1956 in Cleveland, Ohio to Bernardine Murden Taylor and James Smith. Waters' mother was born in Chattanooga, Tennessee, but moved at an early age to Cleveland with her parents, Mary Murden and Raymond Murden. Waters' biological paternal grandparents, Essie Smith and Johnathan Smith, migrated north from Georgia and settled in Cleveland, where Waters' biological father was born. Waters' parents met at East High School, but separated when Waters was a young child. His mother later married Jack Waters, who eventually adopted him. Waters grew up with his five siblings in a middle class neighborhood in East Cleveland, Ohio, where he attended Rozelle Elementary School. From the age of eight years old, Waters learned to play the piano and violin at The Music Settlement. His early influences included piano players Arthur Ferrante and Louis Teicher, and composer Claude Debussy. As a teenager, Waters was introduced to musical theater through a high school production of ‘Guys and Dolls.’

Daryl Waters enrolled in classes at The Music Settlement in Cleveland, Ohio, where he received piano and violin lessons, and learned the fundamentals of music education. He later attended Shaw High School in East Cleveland, Ohio, where his grades suffered as he focused his attention on music. In addition to performing in his own band, Life is Real, Waters was also a member of a group called The Singing Angels. During his sophomore year, he became involved with the Karamu House as a theater music director. After graduation, Waters was awarded a scholarship to attend Livingstone College in Salisbury, North Carolina, where he arranged the music for the marching band, and directed the homecoming talent show, the Startime Revue. He became close to his English professor, K. Wilhelmina Boyd, who helped him adjust to living in the South. In 1978, Waters graduated from Livingstone College, and then worked as a substitute teacher while playing gigs around Cleveland. He moved to New York City in 1981.

Daryl Waters saw his first Broadway play, ‘Don’t Bother Me, I Can’t Cope,’ at seventeen years old. Years later, he moved to New York City in 1981, and started working as a house pianist at a dessert club in Manhattan. There, he worked with performers and artists like composer Michael Skloff and actress Sandra Santiago. In 1983, he was hired as the onstage pianist for the European tour of ‘Ain’t Mishbehavin’.’ Upon his return, he was hired as the music director for the off Broadway play ‘A...My Name is Alice.’ He also joined the Broadway production of ‘Leader of the Pack’ as the associate conductor, working with choreographer and director Michael Peters who choreographed Michael Jackson’s ‘Thriller’ music video. Waters was later introduced to Eartha Kitt, who hired him as her music director at Eartha Kitt Productions in 1986. In working with Kitt, Waters traveled internationally, and was introduced to her expansive musical tastes and repertoire that included Afro-Caribbean and Latin fusion.
