Biographical Note by The HistoryMakers®

Military officer David Richards was born on March 19, 1929 in Sedalia, Missouri to Christina Diggs Richards and David Richards. He attended Lincoln School and C.C. Hubbard High School in Sedalia. Richards then studied at the College of Mortuary Science in St. Louis, Missouri, graduating in 1951. Years later, Richards received his B.A. degree in business administration from Park College in Parkville, Missouri in 1975. Three years later, he earned his M.A. degree in human resources from Pepperdine University.
Upon graduating from high school, Richards joined the United States Army in 1946. He was stationed at Camp Stoneman in California, and deployed overseas to the Pacific Theater. Richards became a member of the U.S. Army band, and rose to head of the reed section. After completing U.S. Army service in 1948, Richards worked briefly as an apprentice mortician, and returned to the Army in 1954. He completed airborne training at Fort Benning, Georgia and attended rigger school at Fort Lee, Virginia. He served ten years in the 612th Quartermaster Aerial Supply Company, and then transferred to the Artic Test Center in Fort Greenly, Alaska, where he tested airdrop equipment. Then, Richards was sent to the U.S. Army Natick Soldier Research, Development and Engineering Center in Massachusetts, where he helped develop expendable parachutes for the Vietnam War. In 1968, Richards became the Army’s first African American warrant officer, and remained the sole African American in that rank until his retirement in 1983. After his Army career, Richards worked at the Savannah-Chatham Metropolitan Police Department in staffing, and later as a crime prevention analyst. He continued teaching as an adjunct professor at Saint Leo University until 2000.

As the first African American warrant officer, Richards was inducted into the Parachute Rigger Warrant Officer’s Hall of Fame upon his retirement in 1983. Richards was also inducted into the Distinguished Order of Saint Martin within the Quartermaster Corps in the United States Army. He was a three time recipient of the Omega Man of the Year Award and the Superior Service Award. Georgia Legislative Black Caucus, Inc. also honored Richards with the Salute to Veterans Award.

Richards was a member of St. Philip A.M.E. Church in Savannah, Georgia. He also served as an advisor to the director of the West Board Street YMCA, as president for the Mental Health Association of the Coastal Empire, as vice chair of human services for Chatham County and as chairperson of the superintendent advisory council for the Chatham County Board of Education. Richards was a board member for the Frank Callen Boys and Girls Club, JHS of Savannah, the Meditation Center Board, the Martin Luther King Day Observance Committee and the Ralph Mark Gilbert Civil Rights Museum.

Richards and his wife, Swannie Moore Richards have three children: David Richards III, Yvette Richards, and Bonnye Richards Anthony.

Richards passed away on February 5, 2019.

David Richards was interviewed by The HistoryMakers on February 9, 2017.

Video Oral History Interview with David Richards, Section A2017_044_001_001, TRT: 1:29:11 2017/02/10

David Richards was born on March 19, 1929 in Sedalia, Missouri to Christina Diggs Richards and David Richards. His mother was one of eleven children born to Anna Diggs and William Diggs in Fayette, Missouri. Due to poor medical care, only three of her siblings lived to adulthood. Richards’ mother graduated from George R. Smith College, and taught at Philander Smith College and the State Fair Community College for Adult Education in Sedalia. Richards’ father was one of seven children born to Susie Richards and William Richards in Howard County, Missouri. He obtained a sixth grade education, and served in World War I. He later became a blacksmith assistant on the Missouri Pacific Railroad. Richards had one older sister, and was raised in a close knit neighborhood in Sedalia. In 1935, he began his education at Lincoln School. He joined the Boy Scouts, and delivered newspapers to earn extra money during the Great Depression.

David Richards learned to play the clarinet at the Lincoln School in Sedalia, Missouri, and joined the band upon entering C.C. Hubbard High School. He also played football and sang in the school choir. After graduating in 1946, Richards joined the U.S. Army. He completed basic training at Camp Lee, Virginia, where he helped read and write mail for older, illiterate servicemen. He was briefly stationed at Camp Stoneman in California, and then deployed overseas to the Pacific Theater of World War II, which had recently ended. At this point, Richards describes the poverty and devastation caused by the war. While stationed in the Philippines, Richards auditioned for a U.S. Army band, and became the head of the reed section. He also organized a choral group that sang on the military radio, and a jazz band that performed at the officers’ clubs. The ensemble was composed of African American servicemen, and performed exclusively for the white officers.

David Richards completed his U.S. Army service in 1948. He worked as an apprentice mortician in Sedalia, Missouri, and used funding from the G.I. Bill to attend the College of Mortuary Science in St Louis, Missouri. In 1954, Richards decided to return to the U.S. Army. He completed airborne training at Fort Benning, Georgia, and attended rigger school at Fort Lee, Virginia. As an African American paratrooper trainee, Richards was subjected to harassment from instructors and superiors who sought to discourage him. Nonetheless, he served for ten years in the 612th Quartermaster Aerial Supply Company at Fort Bragg, where he conducted field testing on parachutes and Bragg, where he conducted field testing on parachutes and airdrop equipment. Next, Richards transferred to the Arctic Test Center in Fort Greenly, Alaska, where he tested airdrop equipment in frigid temperatures. Richards then transferred to the U.S. Army Natick Soldier Research, Development and Engineering Center in Massachusetts, where he helped develop expendable parachutes for the Vietnam War.

David Richards served as a warrant officer in the U.S. Army from 1968 to 1983. He encouraged all the troops under his command to pursue an education, and provided them with time to attend classes in the afternoons. Years later, Richards was honored by a former student, who appointed him as marshal of the annual Veteran’s Council parade in Chatham County, Georgia. In addition to his military service, Richards was involved in numerous organizations, including the NAACP, American Legion and Military Officers Association of America. He also served as a jury commissioner and the vice chairman of Gateway Behavioral Health Services, which provided assistance to people struggling with substance abuse. Richards also served as the board director for the Ralph Mark Gilbert Civil Rights Museum in Savannah, Georgia. Richards reflects upon his legacy and his advice to future generations. He describes how he would like to be remembered, and concludes the interview by narrating his photographs.
